Severe Hail Storm.

HALIFAX HAD UNUSUAL WEATHER CONDITIONS.

The hail and rain storm which swept over Halifax yesterday afternoon was most unusual and severe for this part of the city. The hailstones were of the size of marbles and fell about 5 o'clock. The storm was accompanied by thunder and lightning. The hail also fell, and filled the gutters, ran into the sewers, and when the hail cleared, the streets were covered with a white mantle of hail. The hail also fell, and filled the gutters, ran into the sewers, and when the hail cleared, the streets were covered with a white mantle of hail.

Leeds Train Jumps the Rails.

A terrible accident occurred on June 21, 1912, on the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway between Hobden Bridge and Eastwood Station, when through some unexplained cause the Liverpool to Leeds express left the rails while taking the Charlestown curve--always regarded as dangerous. The engine remained upright, but the two first coaches were telescoped, and the third one rolled over. The passengers in the four rear carriages had a tremendous shock, and then the train suddenly stopped with a jerk which smashed the windows. The occupants jumped out and saw a terrible spectacle, passengers being buried underneath the three wrecked carriages. Willing hands set to work to rescue them, and doctors and ambulance men were quickly on the scene. The more seriously injured received the kindly attention of the people living in the neighbouring houses, who did all they could to lessen their sufferings. When the debris had been searched, the dead bodies of two men and two women were found mutilated beyond recognition. A male corpse was found with the coffin smashed to pieces. A couple returning from a honeymoon in the Isle of Man, had a terrifying experience. The first thing the lady remembered after the crash was finding a woman across her knees, and her husband helplessly wedged in the wreckage. At first she thought he was fatally injured, and her joy knew no bounds on finding he had not sustained even a broken limb. They hired a taxicab and travelled all the way to Leeds by road, arriving there at an o'clock at night. Twenty injured people were taken out of the wreck besides the four dead bodies. Amongst the articles taken from the pockets of the latter was a weekly paper containing a £2,000 insurance coupon. Unfortunately, it was not the one of the conditions of such insurance being that it should bear the ordinary signature of the passenger.

Shackleton's New Ship.

In a corner of the Southampton Docks is packed away a little vessel whose travels may one day grip the attention of the whole world. It is the Foca I, re-christened The Quest, in which Sir Ernest Shackleton, the explorer, hopes to set out late this summer on a new expedition. The vessel, which is a two-masted sloop with an auxiliary steam engine and was originally Norwegian, is of great strength. Its bows are of wood 5 ft. thick, its hull is about 2 ft. thick, and the bows and fore part are strengthened with thick plates of steel. Messrs. Thornycroft are reconditioning the vessel, and it is hoped that it will be completed in time to be visited by the King at Cowes in August. --Daily Mail.

When Choosing the Material for a washable Frock for the growing child--

MOTHER naturally thinks of the possibilities of the fabric shrinking in the wash. It is therefore a relief to her to know that the fabric will not shrink or lose its charm if Lux is used for its cleansing.

Durability, charm of colour, quality of texture, the freshness of newness--these are preserved to all good fabrics washed with Lux. A packet of Lux--a bowl of warm water--and dainty hands can cleanse delightful fabrics in a delightfully easy manner.

The beautiful pure Lux flakes are whisked into a creamy, bubbly lather in an instant. Gently squeeze this cleansing foam through and through the soiled texture--then rinse in clean water, and hang to dry. Lux cannot harm a silk thread. It coaxes rather than forces the dirt from the clothes.

FOR DIRTY FABRICS

Packets (two sizes) may be obtained everywhere.

MUNNEY.

I came into the office a bit late the other day. (Editor--"That's not unusual") and I discovered the precocious Horace at my desk busily engaged in making marks and blots on a sheet of paper. He started up as he saw me and bolted before I could say a word. Sitting down, I examined the manuscript he had left behind him and I found it so amusing that I decided to reproduce it here. It was nothing more or less than an essay on money written in Horace's most original spelling and grammar. Here it is: "Munney is sumthing that lots of peopl want to hav and onley a few of them has got. It is the kuse of them as has it and the envy of them wot hasent. I hasent got any becose the kub dont giv me a livin wage. Dont you believe him wot he sez he gets seven sent a week cos he dont mek and two men were found mutilated beyond recognition. A male corpse was found with the coffin smashed to pieces. A couple returning from a honeymoon in the Isle of Man, had a terrifying experience. Jutland Debt of Honor.

In the early hours of the morning of June 1 five years ago the British Fleet abandoned its pursuit of the beaten Germans after the Battle of Jutland and steered for home, leaving three of our battle-cruisers at the bottom of the North Sea. It has since been disclosed by Mr. Filson Young, in his recently published book "With the Battle-Cruisers," that the defects which caused the loss of these three splendid ships with some 3,000 British officers and men had been revealed at the Battle of the Dogger Bank in January 1915, and had been reported to the Admiralty. But nothing was done to remedy them. To the immortal dead of Jutland the living owe a great debt; and with the living it should be a point of honour to ascertain where the responsibility lies for the loss of these ships by a thorough and careful inquiry. --Daily Mail.

This Week's Wisdom.

Nearly every man knows exactly how to rule a woman--if she would only let him.

When a woman stops powdering her nose and curling her hair, it's a sign that she has nothing left to live for.

Somewhat, just as a bachelor has one devoted to dedicate his whole life to a woman, another girl comes along and interrupts him.

A man's idea of the highest proof of his devotion to a woman is his irresistible impulse to make love to any other woman who happens to remind him of her.

A man can nobly give up a great love for the sake of conscience or duty--but it's awfully hard for him to relinquish a piquant little flirtation that has just begun to be interesting.

VALE!

A matter of four years ago the town was struck a fearful blow. Men found they had to do without their daily pint of rum or stout. And agonies with a mad despair they wildly raged and tore their hair. No longer in the same old way could they their awful thirst allay.

But very soon they looked around. To see if some way could be found by which they might their liquor get. And keep their parched throats always wet. And many divers ways were used.
