DRIED FISH.

If you are looking for cheerfulness these days, do not try to find it in the establishment of a dried fish exporter, but if you do, take our word for it, you will be disappointed. In visiting along the waterfront for about 30 years, there have only been a few times when we have found as much cheer in the atmosphere as there is today. The last two months have brought an almost continuous string of incidents of a kind calculated to break an exporter's heart. For instance, the exchange situation with England, which nobody seems to quite understand. Although the country's sports today are in excess of her sports, yet steadily the millions continue to drop. Then there is the Italian situation—a civil revolution, followed by a change of Government, and in consequence a complete upset temporarily of Italian business. It is not more than a month ago that Italy was making inquiries here for supplies, but to-day she is sending cables cancelling orders right and left. To further add to the troubles of the local situation, competition for trade has broken out in a new spot. France has invaded our West India market, and is offering fish at Cuba at very low prices. Probably she is driven to do this by shrinkage of her business in Mediterranean markets. At any rate, whatever the cause, she is now trying to get business on our ground, and just at the time when we need the trade for ourselves. Porto Rico, which was very bad when we wrote our last report, is still in the same condition, and so far as one can see, without much hope for improving in the near future. Newfoundland has been endeavoring to find a market in Halifax, and for a time did stand a poor chance indeed of collecting what is owed them. However, the darkest hour they say is just before the dawn, so it may be that daylight will shortly be breaking. What has happened in Italy, namely, a more or less peaceful revolution, may prove a good thing for the fish trade. Italy during the past two years has been somewhat in the hands of communists and the socialists, and also some others, who were even worse than that. The new Government has pledged itself as anti-Bolshevik in the extreme, and also states that it hopes by hard work and honest toil to redeem the country from its financial distress. This is a very fine ambition which if practiced may soon begin to bear fruit, not only in domestic business, but also in connection with foreign trade as well. It may be that while for the next two or three months the export demand for dried fish in Europe will be bad, after that there will come an improvement sufficient to clean up the stocks in this country before the opening of the new season next year.

The effect of the low price of dried fish in Newfoundland is extremely distressing, for the returns to the fishermen at to-day's prices are not quite sufficient to pay production costs, and as a result, many firms which have given supplies to the fishermen will stand a poor chance indeed of collecting what is owed them. To Keep Hay From Heating.

The danger from spontaneous combustion in mows and stacks may be lessened by the use of a box-like ventilator, a skeleton tube 12 to 15 inches square and of any length desired, depending upon the size of the mow or stack. The corners are 2 by 4's and the cross pieces 1 by 2's placed close enough together to keep the hay from falling through and blocking the air passage. Diagonal braces are placed in the box at intervals to keep it from collapsing under the weight of the hay. These ventilators are usually placed across the mow at intervals of 7 or 8 feet.

When a mow or stack has become badly heated there is a strong temptation to go in and stir up the hay, but often this is the worst thing that can be done. Admitting air to the hot centre of fermentation may be just the thing needed to start a fire. If air does not get in a part of the hay may be charred without starting a fire; gradually the mow cools and the only loss is the hay that has been carbonized. However, in the early stages when the hay is heating it is sometimes advisable to move hay from one mow to another or to restock. But be sure it is not too hot. Slow combustion inside the mow can be detected by a peculiar sooty odor or by smoke that is irritating to the eyes.—U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Evading the Tariff.

The Advocate now has the duty rate down to 11% to fishermen and the only mention, regarding articles under the per centage is given out as fisheries supplies. Well! Well! No sugar or clothes, boots or shoes, utensils or crockery or any needed article is theirs, only the bit of supplies needed to carry on three months' fishery. Perhaps if more examination is made by the Advocate they will find, according to their unbiased eyesight, that the fishermen will not pay any duty at all! First, in their clamour for a new Reform, they said everything imaginable about the Government then in power regarding the high taxation, and we all know that the tariff rates were never as high as to-day despite what the Advocate might say. The Advocate seems to fear and tremble and all the bluff possible is put up to cover up real facts. However, the people can judge as to the real conditions that exist at present, and no matter what any newspaper may or may not say, there is ample proof of the short coming of this Government. If only 11 per cent is the duty on the fishery supplies it is well, but what is that compared to the duty on the necessities of life needed for every family man in this country who must have many articles which carry an actual duty of 45 per cent?—Twillingate Sun.

Sardine a Young Pilchard.

The sardine is now held to be not a full-grown fish, and the name sardine is in the trade applied to the young of the pilchard. The Norwegian pilchard of the same family, but of a different species, is the same fish as the English sprat, with the variations brought up on environment. The sprat has many points in common with the young herring and the young pilchard. The sprat is not a sardine. It possesses a rough and somewhat spiny development along the lower or ventral edge, the pilchard and the herring being comparatively smooth. In the can, dressed and preserved in oil, the distinction between young pilchards and young herrings is not conspicuous. In the pilchards the size of the scales is relatively larger. While the industry in this popular food began in France, the word "sardine" is derived from the Island of Sardinia, and is used in modified form throughout most European countries. "Sardine" was the first Latin name to be used among Anglo-Saxons for the herring.

The Sport of Doers

A prominent physician recently probed into the question why men smoke. He turned a deaf ear to glib prejudices and to accepted but half-thoughtout notions. He based his conclusions upon a careful study of the use of tobacco by our men during the war. He diagnosed smoking as being clearly a diversion, which helped rather than interfered with a man's performance of duty. Smoking is not a vicious practice but a happy sport. If it were not, this expert declares, men would long ago have begun taking "My Lady Nicotine" in the form of pills or tablets. That's straight to the point. A man lights up his pipe for a little relaxation, not to interfere with but to improve his work.

He feels in need of a moment's let-up which will add to his power. Back he throws himself in the most comfortable position in the old chair; he scratches his match slowly, carefully, not to interfere with but to improve his work. A good smoke—a good sport. A good sport—a good doer, when things have to be done. Smoking is the sport of doers. Of course, a good smoke depends greatly upon having just the right tobacco.

We recommend Edgeworth to you as a tobacco that has pleased many but not all smokers. It may please you beyond words. It may not. We would be very glad to have you pass judgment upon it. Edgeworth Plug Slice comes in flat cakes, cut into thin, moist slices. One slice rubbed between the hands fills the average pipe.

Edgeworth Ready-Rubbed is simply the same tobacco, rubber up, ready to go into your pipe. You're likely to notice how nicely Edgeworth packs. That means that it burns evenly and freely. Edgeworth is sold in various sizes to meet the requirements of many different customers. Both Edgeworth Plug Slice and Edgeworth Ready-Rubbed are put up in pocket-size packages, in attractive tin humidor, and glass jars and in various quantities in between those sizes. Sold everywhere. nov11,12
