LADY LAURA'S RELEASE

THE STORY OF A SPOILED BEAUTY.

CHAPTER XXII.

Lady Laura took more pains than she had ever done before over her toilet, much to the astonishment of Doris Newsham. Her dress, her jewels, the blush roses, were all subjects of anxious interest. "Make me look extra well to-night, Doris," she said, with a kindly smile; "I have something to do."

"And the maid glanced at her mistress in surprise. "I could not make you look more beautiful if I would, my lady," she responded.

Lady Laura's lovely face had a delicate flush, her eyes were bright and clear; she never looked better than she did on this night.

Her ladyship had come to what she considered a very sensible determination. She resolved, if possible, to outshine her rival, to win her husband to herself by dint of her dazzling beauty and her brightness. He should not see a sad look on her face; she would be all light-heartedness and smiles. She would try to amuse him, and keep him chained by her side, even as Gladys Rane did.

She was full of this idea, and resolved that nothing should daunt her, that nothing should interfere with her purpose. She had won him once, why could she not again?

She cried absolutely to trample her pain, her sorrow, her disappointment under foot, and to reveal nothing but smiles and light-heartedness.

"You look like a queen of roses to-night, Laura," the captain remarked. She looked at him with a satisfied smile.

"The strangest part of it is," she said, "that amongst them there is not one thorn."

CHAPTER XXIII.

There was a faint murmur of admiration as the beautiful mother and daughter, accompanied by the gallant captain, entered the ball-room at Lady Holte's.

Angela was soon surrounded by a small and select group of the jeunesse dorée, to most of whom she was a queen.

Lady Laura, after speaking to her hostess, crossed the room with her...

Famous Old Recipe for Cough Syrup

Threats and chills made at home, but it beats them all for quick results.

Thousands of housewives have found that they can save two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough preparations, by using this well-known old recipe for making cough syrup at home. It is simple and cheap but it has no equal for prompt results. It takes right hold of a cough and gives immediate relief, usually stopping an ordinary cough in 24 hours or less.

Get 1/2 ounce of Pinex from any drugget. Pour it into a 10-oz. bottle and add plain granulated sugar syrup to make 16 ounces. If you prefer, use clarified molasses, honey or corn syrup instead of sugar syrup. Either way, it tastes good, keeps perfectly, and lasts a family a long time.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it acts, penetrating through every air passage of the throat and lungs—loosens and raises the phlegm, soothes and seals the membrane, and gradually but surely the annoying throat ticks and frothy cough disappear entirely. Nothing better for bronchitis, spasmodic cough, hoarseness or bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, known the world over for its healing effect on the membranes. Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "2 1/2 ounces of Pinex" with full directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

STOMACH BAD!! MEALS SOUR OR LAY UNDIGESTED

Laura. She talked, but it was easy to see that she did not take any interest in what she was saying, and her smiles were forced and cold. While she danced and conversed her whole heart and thoughts were with her husband and her rival.

Later on, as Lady Laura, tired and dispirited, was sitting out a waits instead of dancing it, the captain came up to her.

"Lady Holte has been telling me that you are not well and are very tired, Laura—is it so?"

She remembered her resolution, and it was almost pitiful to see the effort she made to banish the pain that was gnawing at her heart. The color rushed into her fair face as she denied that she was either tired or ill. She made desperate efforts to amuse him and keep him by her side, but she saw—and the pain of it went to her heart—that he was watching Gladys Rane the whole time that he stood by her side.

"Of what use is it?" she cried to herself.

Suddenly he bent over her, and it suddenly remembering why he was there.

"If you are tired, Laura," he said, "you had better go home and retire to rest."

"Will you accompany me?" she asked.

"I will take you home; but I shall come back again," he answered. "I consider this the best ball of the season, and I do not care to leave it so early."

"Nor do I," she said.

And the captain, without further ado, turned away abruptly and went in search of Gladys Rane.

A short time afterward Angela came up to her mother, and sat down by her side.

"Mamma, darling," she said, "you look so ill, so tired and weary; many people have spoken of it."

Lady Laura looked at her daughter with a startled expression on her face.

"Do you mean that?" she asked.

"Are people really talking of me? Do they say that I look ill or unhappy?"

"Every one thinks you look ill," she answered gently.

"Do you think any one knows why?" asked Lady Laura.

"No; but, mamma darling, I know. You must do one of two things—either you must trample your trouble under foot and look your usual bright self or you must go home."

"I have tried to smother my grief, but I cannot. I must go home," said Lady Laura. "But, if I do, Angel, he will spend all his time with Miss Rane. It will be a relief and pleasure to him if I go; and the beautiful woman looked at her with such despair in her face that Angela hardly knew what to say to her. "Think of that, Angel!" she went on. "I believed he loved me dearly, and now it is a relief to him that I should go away and leave him to enjoy the society that he prefers so infinitely to mine. Oh, Angel, what a mockery my diamonds and roses are! He does not care for me. I—I think I will go home, Angel; I cannot stay here!"

"I am sure it will be best, mamma," urged Angela. "Shall I tell the captain?"

"No," said the unhappy lady; and then her mood suddenly changed. "After all, I will not go. He would be pleased. I will not go. Angel. Why should I leave her to triumph over me? Why should they two spend the night so happily, and I go home to weep? He is my husband, Angel."

and in doing so met Lady Kinloch with Gladys Rane.

The meeting could not be avoided even had Lady Laura wished it.

For a few minutes these two beautiful women who were destined to cross each other's lives so fatally, stood looking at each other, each measuring the other's strength, the one triumphing in the consciousness that she was loved, the other triumphing in the knowledge that she was a lawful wife.

Outwardly, everything was pleasant and gracious; within, were the elements of tragedy.

The men awarded the palm of beauty to Lady Laura—for few understood the dark, passionate face of Gladys Rane. It never lighted to give her any grace save for Vance Wynyard, and none but he knew the full beauty of the dark eyes and crimson-tinted lips.

It was when the two women looked steadily at each other that the soul of each shone in their respective eyes.

"I am his wife; he is mine forever and ever!" could be read in Lady Laura's face.

"He loves me!" shone in the dark eyes of Gladys.

And then came another phrase of Lady Laura's martyrdom. Hitherto it was from a distance that she had seen her husband's devotion to Miss Rane. He was standing by his wife's side now when he asked Gladys for her programme and begged to know how many waltzes she would spare for him.

It was Lady Kinloch who answered the question. She did not seem well pleased with the captain, and, setting aside his questionable conduct in showing such marked preference for her niece, Lady Kinloch considered that it was for Gladys a waste of time to flirt with a man who already had a beautiful wife of his own.

"You must not expect to monopolize my niece, Captain Wynyard," she said, in a clear voice; "Miss Rane has many friends in the room."

Lady Laura felt a glow of gratitude toward this woman, whom she had never even liked before; but the captain was not to be put down by so mild a protest. He merely bowed to Lady Kinloch, and turned to Gladys with a smile on his face.

"Monopoly is charming in such a case as this. There are plenty of waltzes; may I have the first, 'La Berceuse'?"

Gladys blushed with delight under the eyes of the two who were looking on so coldly.

"You may have that and the third, the 'Manola.'"

"Better give Captain Wynyard your programme to fill at his pleasure, Gladys," said Lady Kinloch, satirically.

And the girl's dark eyes, looking at him, said plainly, "I would if I dared."

Lady Laura saw the look, and realized all that it conveyed.

Then the captain and Miss Rane went to join the dancers, leaving the two ladies together. Lady Kinloch would have made some remark as to the captain's conduct, but one look at the pale face beside her disarmed her. She never forgot the yearning expression in her companion's wistful face.

A few minutes later Lady Laura was surrounded by a little court of admirers. She remembered her resolution, and she tried bravely to carry it out; but her heart gave way, her wistful eyes turning ever to her husband, who seemed only happy when with her rival.

That night her partners wondered what had betwixt the lovely Lady
