

Great Mid-Summer Linen Sale

There is a time for everything---This is an exceptionally good time to buy good Linens cheap.

WE want the attention now of every housekeeper in and around London, of every hotel-keeper, of every caterer, of every matron of public institutions. We have inaugurated our Mid-summer sale of Linens, and intend that everyone who participates in this sale will have good reasons for remembering it by the great saving it will be to them. Our Linens require no big adjectives to introduce them. Our record for keeping the choicest lines stands today as it has stood for years. Anything you buy from this department can be fully depended upon. And if it isn't just right you can have your money back. That's the test.

You Spend Your Money Here and You Take No Chances

UNBLEACHED TABLING BARGAINS

Special 55-inch Heavy Damask, two patterns, our regular price was 25c. Sale price 19c.
Special 60-inch Heavy All-Linen Damask, new patterns, was very cheap at 50c. Sale price 45c.
60-inch Heavy Damask, four patterns, per yard 45c.
A Strong, Heavy Linen, washes easily, for ordinary use, wide width 30c.
All Pure Linen, 52 inches wide, would be cheap at 50c, our price 40c.
One of our always reliable brands, grand weaver, and bleaches quickly 45c.
A superior quality All Pure Linen, a satisfactory line to buy 50c.
A fine quality of Half-Bleached Damask. See our new patterns 65c.
Fine Half-Bleached All Linen, 72 inches wide, splendid weaver 90c.
55-inch Heavy Linen Cloth, now at 55c.

BLEACHED TABLE LINENS

63-inch Fine Damask, favorite fern pattern, reduced to 65c.
Fine All-Linen Damask, something new in design, ask to see it 75c.
72-inch Very Fine Irish Damask, fine new patterns 81c.
Two new designs in a superb quality of Heavy Irish Damask 81c.
A 90-inch Fine Pure Linen Damask, for extra wide tables 90c.

SHEETING OFFERINGS

Buying in large quantities from the British, Canadian and American manufacturers, we are always able to quote low prices, and our past record is a guarantee of reliability.
Plain Bleached Sheet, 8-4, at 20c, 25c, 28c and 32c.
Plain Bleached Sheet, 9-4, at 25c, 28c, 30c, 35c, 40c and 50c.
Twilled Bleached Sheet, 8-4, at 25c, 28c, 30c, 35c, 40c and 50c.
Twilled Bleached Sheet, 9-4, at 25c, 28c, 30c, 35c, 40c and 50c.
Plain Bleached Sheet, 10-4, fine English make 55c.
Twilled Sheet, 10-4, fine English make 55c.
Plain Unbleached Sheet, 8-4, at 15c, 20c, 25c and 30c.
Plain Unbleached Sheet, 9-4, at 20c, 25c, 28c and 30c.
Twilled Unbleached Sheet, 8-4, at 20c, 25c, 28c and 30c.
Twilled Unbleached Sheet, 9-4, at 20c, 25c, 28c and 30c.
PILLOW COTTONS, from 40 to 52 inches wide, in plain and circular, different weights.
READY-MADE SHEETS AND PILLOW CASES—Plain hem and hem-stitched.

Fine Hand Loom Sets.

SOME NOTABLE REDUCTIONS.

Set No. 1—Cloth, 2x2½, regular price $5.00, sale price $4.00.
Napkins, 5x8½, regular price $5.75, sale price $4.75.
Set No. 2—Cloth, 2x3, regular price $5.00, sale price $4.00.
Napkins, 5x8½, regular price $5.75, sale price $4.75.
Set No. 3—Cloth, 2x3, regular price $5.75, sale price $4.75.
Napkins, 5x8½, regular price $5.75, sale price $4.75.
Set No. 4—Cloth, 2x3, regular price $6.00, sale price $5.00.
Napkins, 5x8½, regular price $6.00, sale price $5.00.
Set No. 5—Cloth, 2x3, regular price $8.50, sale price $7.00.
Napkins, 5x8½, regular price $8.50, sale price $7.00.
Set No. 6—Cloth, 2x2½, regular price $5.75, sale price $4.75.
Napkins, 5x8½, regular price $5.75, sale price $4.75.
Set No. 7—Cloth, 2x3, regular price $7.50, sale price $6.00.
Napkins, 5x8½, regular price $7.50, sale price $6.00.

NO EXAGGERATION to state that these are without exception the finest Linens shown in London. They will find ready purchasers at these low prices, especially from those who know our stock.

See Our East Window.

You cannot stay at home and understand the magnitude of this sale. As soon as possible after reading this announcement you should come or send. All we can do is to invite you.

TABLE NAPKIN BARGAINS

Large range of patterns in the various sizes at 75c, $1, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75, $2, $2.50, $3, up to $5. Specials in all Pure Linen, five-eighths size, per dozen, $1.25 and $1.50. Hemstitched Napkins (cloths to match), per dozen, $3.50 to $9.

TRAY CLOTH BARGAINS

A great variety of styles in Fringed and Hemstitched. Each from 15c to $1.50. Fine Hand-Embroidered, Hemstitched styles of great beauty. Each at 50c, $1 and $1.50. Some very choice Five O'Clock Tea Cloths, a very handsome design, at $1. Others from 75c to $2.00. SIDEBOARD SCARVES IN NEW DESIGNS AND IN ALL LENGTHS.

GREAT TOWEL BARGAINS

Forty-five dozen assorted makes, some worth up to 25c each, and the cheapest we sell regularly for 30c a pair. The whole lot now, goes at $1.50 per dozen, or 12½c each.
Large size Bath Towels, wonderful value at 12½c, 15c, 20c, 25c, 30c, 45c, 50c and 60c each.

FANCY BATH RUGS AT $1.25 EACH.

TOWELING BARGAINS

2 SPECIALS—One is our regular 5½c Fine Glass Toweling, at 6½c. The other is our Pure Linen Roller Toweling, heavy, very special at 7½c.

WHITE BED QUILTS

Some really interesting values to housekeepers. Many have bought from our large stock; but we have a number left to dispose of at tempting prices: Crochet Quilts, from best American makers, large size, at 75c. Better ones finished ready for use, at 85c, $1, $1.25, $1.50 and $1.75. A nice single bed size, at $1. Regular 2½c Marseilles Quilts, at $1.75. Finer grades at $2, $2.25 and $4.50. Mercerized Quilts, equal in appearance to Spun Silk—or, in other words, 25 worth of beauty for $5. Have you seen them? Wash easily, retaining handsome appearance.

SMALLMAN & INGRAM,

149, 151 and 153 Dundas Street, London.

Many Virtues, No Faults.

SALADA
CEYLON TEA

Pure, Healthful and Delicious.
Lead Packets Only.
25c, 30c, 40c, 50c, 60c.
At Grocers.

Black, Green or Mixed Tea.

A FATEFUL...
....DIAMOND

"Where do you come from?"
"Boston. I live with Mrs. Jones; but she's poor, and I want to do something to help her—and myself, too."
The farmer regarded him curiously. "Now did you get here so early this morning?" Mr. Brown inquired.
"Walked. I got up before four o'clock."
"Had any breakfast?"
"Yes, sir."
But the boy hung his head and blushed now, ashamed to own how simple and insufficient his breakfast had really been, while the fumes of fragrant coffee, fried potatoes and other appetizing odors from the kitchen made his heart and stomach yearn as only a hungry boy's can.

TEA.

All grocers sell Tea, but all Teas are not the same. Some are good and some are not. We have had a great many years' experience, and after carefully studying the productions of all the countries we recommend the use of Pure Indian or Ceylon.

Make your Tea in an earthen pot, use boiling water, let it draw seven minutes.
Buy our 25c or 35c Indian or Ceylon.

Fitzgerald, Scandrett & Co
153 DUNDAS ST.

When he went up to the shanty, where the baskets were collected and packed into crates, to receive his money from Farmer Brown, and the sum was counted out to him, he flushed with pleasure and drew back.

"Please, sir, it does not all belong to me," he said. "I've had my breakfast and dinner, you know."
"Yes, and you're going to have some supper, too, my lad," returned the man, good-naturedly. "Take the money, child; you've earned it fast enough; that five mile walk was worth something, and you've done your work well besides. What do you say to staying through the season with me?"
The man had money, and the boy needed all day. He liked his looks and quiet ways, and felt much interest in him.

"May I?" cried Louis, eagerly. "How long will it be?"

"Four or five weeks. You could earn considerable in that time, at the rate you have worked today."
"But I should like to go home to-night and tell Aunt Mary about it. She would worry if I should stay away without letting her know where I was. I could come out early tomorrow morning again, though."

"Very well; we are going to send a team in tonight with a load of berries, so you can ride if you like."
The boy, of course, was glad that he had not those five long miles to walk again, for his legs and back ached with their unaccustomed labor that day, and his face shone with delight as he looked at the money, at the prospect of earning as much, if not more, every day for the next four or five weeks.

After supper he followed the men into the great barn, and made himself so useful there about the chores, while the market wagon was being loaded, that he won their good-will at the very outset.

Then the ride back into the city in the evening was delicious; but the best of all was telling kind Mrs. Jones of his day's experience, and then putting the money he had earned into the hard, red hand that had done so much for him for so many years.

"No, no, Louis; I can't take it. To think you should have walked five miles and then worked all day!" she said, brokenly.

"But I've lived on you long enough, Aunt Mary. I'm going to do something for myself now," Louis said, gravely. "Bless the boy! Well, I'll take the money, but I don't begrudge what I've done for you. You can go to Mr. Brown's if you like; I don't doubt you'll fare far better than here, though I shall miss you, Louis," and she covertly brushed a regretful tear from her cheek as she gave her sanction to his project.

So the next morning early Louis trudged back to the farm, and felt himself almost a man to be "hired for the season" and to be able to support himself.

During the next five weeks he averaged fifty boxes a day, while every day, before breakfast and after supper, he made himself so useful about the farm that everybody pronounced him "a capital little fellow, so smart and useful."

Three mornings of the week he helped Sarah to churn, besides performing many other little services, which, of course, recommended him to her favor at once. Then he rinsed out the milk cans, helped to feed the horses and pigs, and drove the cows home from pasture every evening.
(To be Continued.)

When he went up to the shanty, where the baskets were collected and packed into crates, to receive his money from Farmer Brown, and the sum was counted out to him, he flushed with pleasure and drew back.

"Please, sir, it does not all belong to me," he said. "I've had my breakfast and dinner, you know."
"Yes, and you're going to have some supper, too, my lad," returned the man, good-naturedly. "Take the money, child; you've earned it fast enough; that five mile walk was worth something, and you've done your work well besides. What do you say to staying through the season with me?"
The man had money, and the boy needed all day. He liked his looks and quiet ways, and felt much interest in him.

"May I?" cried Louis, eagerly. "How long will it be?"

"Four or five weeks. You could earn considerable in that time, at the rate you have worked today."
"But I should like to go home to-night and tell Aunt Mary about it. She would worry if I should stay away without letting her know where I was. I could come out early tomorrow morning again, though."

"Very well; we are going to send a team in tonight with a load of berries, so you can ride if you like."
The boy, of course, was glad that he had not those five long miles to walk again, for his legs and back ached with their unaccustomed labor that day, and his face shone with delight as he looked at the money, at the prospect of earning as much, if not more, every day for the next four or five weeks.

After supper he followed the men into the great barn, and made himself so useful there about the chores, while the market wagon was being loaded, that he won their good-will at the very outset.

Then the ride back into the city in the evening was delicious; but the best of all was telling kind Mrs. Jones of his day's experience, and then putting the money he had earned into the hard, red hand that had done so much for him for so many years.

"No, no, Louis; I can't take it. To think you should have walked five miles and then worked all day!" she said, brokenly.

"But I've lived on you long enough, Aunt Mary. I'm going to do something for myself now," Louis said, gravely. "Bless the boy! Well, I'll take the money, but I don't begrudge what I've done for you. You can go to Mr. Brown's if you like; I don't doubt you'll fare far better than here, though I shall miss you, Louis," and she covertly brushed a regretful tear from her cheek as she gave her sanction to his project.

So the next morning early Louis trudged back to the farm, and felt himself almost a man to be "hired for the season" and to be able to support himself.

During the next five weeks he averaged fifty boxes a day, while every day, before breakfast and after supper, he made himself so useful about the farm that everybody pronounced him "a capital little fellow, so smart and useful."

Three mornings of the week he helped Sarah to churn, besides performing many other little services, which, of course, recommended him to her favor at once. Then he rinsed out the milk cans, helped to feed the horses and pigs, and drove the cows home from pasture every evening.
(To be Continued.)

When he went up to the shanty, where the baskets were collected and packed into crates, to receive his money from Farmer Brown, and the sum was counted out to him, he flushed with pleasure and drew back.

"Please, sir, it does not all belong to me," he said. "I've had my breakfast and dinner, you know."
"Yes, and you're going to have some supper, too, my lad," returned the man, good-naturedly. "Take the money, child; you've earned it fast enough; that five mile walk was worth something, and you've done your work well besides. What do you say to staying through the season with me?"
The man had money, and the boy needed all day. He liked his looks and quiet ways, and felt much interest in him.

"May I?" cried Louis, eagerly. "How long will it be?"

"Four or five weeks. You could earn considerable in that time, at the rate you have worked today."
"But I should like to go home to-night and tell Aunt Mary about it. She would worry if I should stay away without letting her know where I was. I could come out early tomorrow morning again, though."

"Very well; we are going to send a team in tonight with a load of berries, so you can ride if you like."
The boy, of course, was glad that he had not those five long miles to walk again, for his legs and back ached with their unaccustomed labor that day, and his face shone with delight as he looked at the money, at the prospect of earning as much, if not more, every day for the next four or five weeks.

After supper he followed the men into the great barn, and made himself so useful there about the chores, while the market wagon was being loaded, that he won their good-will at the very outset.

Then the ride back into the city in the evening was delicious; but the best of all was telling kind Mrs. Jones of his day's experience, and then putting the money he had earned into the hard, red hand that had done so much for him for so many years.

"No, no, Louis; I can't take it. To think you should have walked five miles and then worked all day!" she said, brokenly.

"But I've lived on you long enough, Aunt Mary. I'm going to do something for myself now," Louis said, gravely. "Bless the boy! Well, I'll take the money, but I don't begrudge what I've done for you. You can go to Mr. Brown's if you like; I don't doubt you'll fare far better than here, though I shall miss you, Louis," and she covertly brushed a regretful tear from her cheek as she gave her sanction to his project.

So the next morning early Louis trudged back to the farm, and felt himself almost a man to be "hired for the season" and to be able to support himself.

During the next five weeks he averaged fifty boxes a day, while every day, before breakfast and after supper, he made himself so useful about the farm that everybody pronounced him "a capital little fellow, so smart and useful."

Three mornings of the week he helped Sarah to churn, besides performing many other little services, which, of course, recommended him to her favor at once. Then he rinsed out the milk cans, helped to feed the horses and pigs, and drove the cows home from pasture every evening.
(To be Continued.)

When he went up to the shanty, where the baskets were collected and packed into crates, to receive his money from Farmer Brown, and the sum was counted out to him, he flushed with pleasure and drew back.

"Please, sir, it does not all belong to me," he said. "I've had my breakfast and dinner, you know."
"Yes, and you're going to have some supper, too, my lad," returned the man, good-naturedly. "Take the money, child; you've earned it fast enough; that five mile walk was worth something, and you've done your work well besides. What do you say to staying through the season with me?"
The man had money, and the boy needed all day. He liked his looks and quiet ways, and felt much interest in him.

"May I?" cried Louis, eagerly. "How long will it be?"

"Four or five weeks. You could earn considerable in that time, at the rate you have worked today."
"But I should like to go home to-night and tell Aunt Mary about it. She would worry if I should stay away without letting her know where I was. I could come out early tomorrow morning again, though."

"Very well; we are going to send a team in tonight with a load of berries, so you can ride if you like."
The boy, of course, was glad that he had not those five long miles to walk again, for his legs and back ached with their unaccustomed labor that day, and his face shone with delight as he looked at the money, at the prospect of earning as much, if not more, every day for the next four or five weeks.

After supper he followed the men into the great barn, and made himself so useful there about the chores, while the market wagon was being loaded, that he won their good-will at the very outset.

Then the ride back into the city in the evening was delicious; but the best of all was telling kind Mrs. Jones of his day's experience, and then putting the money he had earned into the hard, red hand that had done so much for him for so many years.

"No, no, Louis; I can't take it. To think you should have walked five miles and then worked all day!" she said, brokenly.

"But I've lived on you long enough, Aunt Mary. I'm going to do something for myself now," Louis said, gravely. "Bless the boy! Well, I'll take the money, but I don't begrudge what I've done for you. You can go to Mr. Brown's if you like; I don't doubt you'll fare far better than here, though I shall miss you, Louis," and she covertly brushed a regretful tear from her cheek as she gave her sanction to his project.

So the next morning early Louis trudged back to the farm, and felt himself almost a man to be "hired for the season" and to be able to support himself.

During the next five weeks he averaged fifty boxes a day, while every day, before breakfast and after supper, he made himself so useful about the farm that everybody pronounced him "a capital little fellow, so smart and useful."

Three mornings of the week he helped Sarah to churn, besides performing many other little services, which, of course, recommended him to her favor at once. Then he rinsed out the milk cans, helped to feed the horses and pigs, and drove the cows home from pasture every evening.
(To be Continued.)

When he went up to the shanty, where the baskets were collected and packed into crates, to receive his money from Farmer Brown, and the sum was counted out to him, he flushed with pleasure and drew back.

"Please, sir, it does not all belong to me," he said. "I've had my breakfast and dinner, you know."
"Yes, and you're going to have some supper, too, my lad," returned the man, good-naturedly. "Take the money, child; you've earned it fast enough; that five mile walk was worth something, and you've done your work well besides. What do you say to staying through the season with me?"
The man had money, and the boy needed all day. He liked his looks and quiet ways, and felt much interest in him.

"May I?" cried Louis, eagerly. "How long will it be?"

"Four or five weeks. You could earn considerable in that time, at the rate you have worked today."
"But I should like to go home to-night and tell Aunt Mary about it. She would worry if I should stay away without letting her know where I was. I could come out early tomorrow morning again, though."

"Very well; we are going to send a team in tonight with a load of berries, so you can ride if you like."
The boy, of course, was glad that he had not those five long miles to walk again, for his legs and back ached with their unaccustomed labor that day, and his face shone with delight as he looked at the money, at the prospect of earning as much, if not more, every day for the next four or five weeks.

After supper he followed the men into the great barn, and made himself so useful there about the chores, while the market wagon was being loaded, that he won their good-will at the very outset.

Then the ride back into the city in the evening was delicious; but the best of all was telling kind Mrs. Jones of his day's experience, and then putting the money he had earned into the hard, red hand that had done so much for him for so many years.

"No, no, Louis; I can't take it. To think you should have walked five miles and then worked all day!" she said, brokenly.

"But I've lived on you long enough, Aunt Mary. I'm going to do something for myself now," Louis said, gravely. "Bless the boy! Well, I'll take the money, but I don't begrudge what I've done for you. You can go to Mr. Brown's if you like; I don't doubt you'll fare far better than here, though I shall miss you, Louis," and she covertly brushed a regretful tear from her cheek as she gave her sanction to his project.

So the next morning early Louis trudged back to the farm, and felt himself almost a man to be "hired for the season" and to be able to support himself.

During the next five weeks he averaged fifty boxes a day, while every day, before breakfast and after supper, he made himself so useful about the farm that everybody pronounced him "a capital little fellow, so smart and useful."

Three mornings of the week he helped Sarah to churn, besides performing many other little services, which, of course, recommended him to her favor at once. Then he rinsed out the milk cans, helped to feed the horses and pigs, and drove the cows home from pasture every evening.
(To be Continued.)

When he went up to the shanty, where the baskets were collected and packed into crates, to receive his money from Farmer Brown, and the sum was counted out to him, he flushed with pleasure and drew back.

"Please, sir, it does not all belong to me," he said. "I've had my breakfast and dinner, you know."
"Yes, and you're going to have some supper, too, my lad," returned the man, good-naturedly. "Take the money, child; you've earned it fast enough; that five mile walk was worth something, and you've done your work well besides. What do you say to staying through the season with me?"
The man had money, and the boy needed all day. He liked his looks and quiet ways, and felt much interest in him.

"May I?" cried Louis, eagerly. "How long will it be?"

"Four or five weeks. You could earn considerable in that time, at the rate you have worked today."
"But I should like to go home to-night and tell Aunt Mary about it. She would worry if I should stay away without letting her know where I was. I could come out early tomorrow morning again, though."

"Very well; we are going to send a team in tonight with a load of berries, so you can ride if you like."
The boy, of course, was glad that he had not those five long miles to walk again, for his legs and back ached with their unaccustomed labor that day, and his face shone with delight as he looked at the money, at the prospect of earning as much, if not more, every day for the next four or five weeks.

After supper he followed the men into the great barn, and made himself so useful there about the chores, while the market wagon was being loaded, that he won their good-will at the very outset.

Then the ride back into the city in the evening was delicious; but the best of all was telling kind Mrs. Jones of his day's experience, and then putting the money he had earned into the hard, red hand that had done so much for him for so many years.

"No, no, Louis; I can't take it. To think you should have walked five miles and then worked all day!" she said, brokenly.

"But I've lived on you long enough, Aunt Mary. I'm going to do something for myself now," Louis said, gravely. "Bless the boy! Well, I'll take the money, but I don't begrudge what I've done for you. You can go to Mr. Brown's if you like; I don't doubt you'll fare far better than here, though I shall miss you, Louis," and she covertly brushed a regretful tear from her cheek as she gave her sanction to his project.

So the next morning early Louis trudged back to the farm, and felt himself almost a man to be "hired for the season" and to be able to support himself.

During the next five weeks he averaged fifty boxes a day, while every day, before breakfast and after supper, he made himself so useful about the farm that everybody pronounced him "a capital little fellow, so smart and useful."

Three mornings of the week he helped Sarah to churn, besides performing many other little services, which, of course, recommended him to her favor at once. Then he rinsed out the milk cans, helped to feed the horses and pigs, and drove the cows home from pasture every evening.
(To be Continued.)

When he went up to the shanty, where the baskets were collected and packed into crates, to receive his money from Farmer Brown, and the sum was counted out to him, he flushed with pleasure and drew back.

"Please, sir, it does not all belong to me," he said. "I've had my breakfast and dinner, you know."
"Yes, and you're going to have some supper, too, my lad," returned the man, good-naturedly. "Take the money, child; you've earned it fast enough; that five mile walk was worth something, and you've done your work well besides. What do you say to staying through the season with me?"
The man had money, and the boy needed all day. He liked his looks and quiet ways, and felt much interest in him.

"May I?" cried Louis, eagerly. "How long will it be?"

"Four or five weeks. You could earn considerable in that time, at the rate you have worked today."
"But I should like to go home to-night and tell Aunt Mary about it. She would worry if I should stay away without letting her know where I was. I could come out early tomorrow morning again, though."

"Very well; we are going to send a team in tonight with a load of berries, so you can ride if you like."
The boy, of course, was glad that he had not those five long miles to walk again, for his legs and back ached with their unaccustomed labor that day, and his face shone with delight as he looked at the money, at the prospect of earning as much, if not more, every day for the next four or five weeks.

After supper he followed the men into the great barn, and made himself so useful there about the chores, while the market wagon was being loaded, that he won their good-will at the very outset.

Then the ride back into the city in the evening was delicious; but the best of all was telling kind Mrs. Jones of his day's experience, and then putting the money he had earned into the hard, red hand that had done so much for him for so many years.

"No, no, Louis; I can't take it. To think you should have walked five miles and then worked all day!" she said, brokenly.

"But I've lived on you long enough, Aunt Mary. I'm going to do something for myself now," Louis said, gravely. "Bless the boy! Well, I'll take the money, but I don't begrudge what I've done for you. You can go to Mr. Brown's if you like; I don't doubt you'll fare far better than here, though I shall miss you, Louis," and she covertly brushed a regretful tear from her cheek as she gave her sanction to his project.

So the next morning early Louis trudged back to the farm, and felt himself almost a man to be "hired for the season" and to be able to support himself.

During the next five weeks he averaged fifty boxes a day, while every day, before breakfast and after supper, he made himself so useful about the farm that everybody pronounced him "a capital little fellow, so smart and useful."

Three mornings of the week he helped Sarah to churn, besides performing many other little services, which, of course, recommended him to her favor at once. Then he rinsed out the milk cans, helped to feed the horses and pigs, and drove the cows home from pasture every evening.
(To be Continued.)

When he went up to the shanty, where the baskets were collected and packed into crates, to receive his money from Farmer Brown, and the sum was counted out to him, he flushed with pleasure and drew back.

"Please, sir, it does not all belong to me," he