DIAPHANOUS GOWNS ARE FINE FOR WINTER

Flimsy Dresses and Split Skirts
Are All Right, Says Health Department.

Washington, Oct. 22.—The split skirt and flimsy gown today received the official sanction of the United States public health service.

Chilling fall winds and cold wintery blasts will not bar the latest modes because people—especially women—are inclined to wear too many clothes in winter anyway, according to assistant Surgeon-General Rucker, who today prescribed a few fall and winter health hints for the general public.

"To prevent winter colds, influenza, and kindred ailments, dress warmly and comfortably, but don't overload your body with heavy garments," said Dr. Rucker. "This, of course, does not apply to overcoats and outer garments. Dress according to your particular climate, and dress comfortably, and your usual fall and winter colds are not liable to bother."

Women, Take Note.
 "Slit skirts and diaphanous gowns are not enemies to health in cold weather," he continued. "On the contrary, the woman who wears the present day styles will be less liable to catch cold than the woman who crowds her body with heavy woollens from the first chilly day."

"Persons who are not in the open air during the day should especially guard against heavy underwear in cold weather, but should be careful when outside," said Dr. Rucker.

"Cold feet are always dangerous," he said.

Keep Windows Open.
 Dr. Rucker repeated the established warning against sleeping in stuffy rooms and declared the open window bed chamber, no matter how cold, is always a foe to bad colds and pneumonia.

monia. He also gave advice on how to cure a cold in the early stages. Here it is:
 "When you feel a cold coming on, go into a room, open all the windows and disrobe. The cold air won't hurt you. Take a stiff brush and rub your body until it glows all over. The cold will go away."

Social Evening of First Church Guild

Games, Contests and Musical Program
Make Pleasant Evening.

The Presbyterian Guild of the First Presbyterian Church held its first meeting in the form of a social in the lecture-room of the church Tuesday evening. A special program was provided, among the musical numbers being solos by Miss Hayes, Miss Edna Weston and Mr. Ed Crawford. A violin solo was very beautifully rendered by Miss Kathleen Broderick, and the piano selection by Miss Madeline Simpson showed marked talent and fine technique. Several interesting games and contests added to the social character of the evening. While a delightful lunch was being served by the ladies of the Guild a number of fine orchestral numbers were played by the Guild Orchestra. The piano accompanists during the evening were Miss Gertrude Rennie and Miss Wanda Jarvis. In a brief address Rev. W. J. Knox emphasized the importance of co-operating in the work of the Guild. A vote of thanks to all who assisted in making the evening a success was moved by Mr. A. C. Rich, president. The president, Mr. J. A. C. Rich, presided. The lecture-room was seasonably decorated with pumpkin lanterns.

Weekly meetings will be held by the Guild during the present season. Next Monday Rev. Mr. Knox will deliver an address.

CAMLAHIE.

Cambridge, Oct. 22.—A team owned and driven by John D. Crawford took flight last evening and ran away. They jumped so quickly that the rig was completely overturned, and, freeing themselves, ran for about a mile and were finally caught in the mill yard here. Mr. Crawford escaped unhurt.

BARRIE AT THE CLUB.

Sir James M. Barrie is not at all pleased that his English friends have poked so much fun at his new play, "The Admirable Crichton." It needed a good deal of persuasion to prevent him launching a reply to his critics, but that would have made one of the most scathing and furious attacks on the intelligence of the public that an Irish author ever penned in the hours of his disappointment, disgust, and despair.

SIR J. M. BARRIE.

Although he is "lionized" wherever he goes, the famous novelist and playwright, doesn't love society, and now society has failed him he will love the world of fiction less than ever. He belongs to very few clubs, but is a member of the Athenaeum, to which he was elected by the literary merit without taking his turn on the waiting list, a distinction paid to very few men.

There is a good story told of his first visit to the club. He had never been inside the building before, and, seeing a gentleman standing in the hall, he went up to him and asked him if he would kindly direct him to the cloak room. Two gentlemen not only obliged, but seeing that he was a new member, volunteered afterwards to show him around the building.

They spent quite a pleasant hour together, and it was the course of which Sir J. M. Barrie was introduced to all the literary curiosities which the Athenaeum possesses. When the round of the rooms was completed Sir "Peter Pan" Barrie, as he is sometimes called, warmly thanked his new-found friend for his courtesy.

"Don't mention it, don't mention it," said the gentleman. "I have been a member here for thirty years, and you are the first member of the club who has ever spoken to me."

NOT A JOKE AT ALL.

A European traveller told not long ago with much glee a story which he believed to be a great joke on Horace Fletcher. Going into an Italian restaurant with a party, he discovered Mr. Fletcher seated before a groaning board filled with a great variety of delicious goodies, many of which are not commonly associated with the diets of the food faddists. Mr. Fletcher appeared to devour the meal with contented relish. "How different," said the traveller, "are some reformers when you get them off their guard." But as a matter of fact this incident has nothing in it to contradict Horace Fletcher's doctrine of eating. Mr. Fletcher maintains that if one eats thoroughly, getting all the enjoyment possible out of the food he eats, he may eat almost anything with perfect safety. To return to the details of nature in the matter of eating is Mr. Fletcher's ideal. Do not eat when you are not hungry, but when you are hungry eat whatever you want and as much of it as you want, and then if you eat thoroughly it will satisfy your program. How much more satisfying this program is than that of the average diet reformer!

THE MORMON MEMBER.

Marlin Wolf, the member of the Alberta Legislature for Cardston, is making his influence felt in the Provincial Parliament. Last year Mr. Wolf was honored with the Premier's request that he second the speech at the opening of the session. This year the Cardston member made grave charges against an employee of the Dominion Government in one of the western provinces and western papers are reporting that his speeches are the most brilliant that have been heard in the house.

At home Mr. Wolf is a farmer, having a large tract of land south of Cardston, the Temple City of Canada. In religion he is a Mormon, and because of his religious belief, grave fears for the future of the province have been expressed. Contrary to general belief, Mr. Wolf is not a polygamist, although he believes in the principle of polygamy. He is the only Mormon in the Alberta Legislature, but the time cannot be far distant when a redistribution must be made to take in another large tract settled by Mormons, and in all probability another Mormon will have a seat in the House.
