INSURANCE ON CHILDREN THE AUDITOR'S PETITION.

30,000 POLICIES SAID TO BE CARRIED IN CANADA. The Question of Making Child Insurance a Crime Discussed by the Senate-Committee of Opinion That the Ontario Law is Sufficient and the Facts Do Not Warrant Interference.

Ottawa, June 11.-In the Senate Mr. McClellan called attention to the crimes said to have developed from the practice of effecting insurance on the lives of children and those incompetent to make personal application for insurance, and asked the Government if it proposed to take any measures to restrict or prevent such practices.

The Senator disclaimed any personal interest in any insurance company. He simply desired to place the question fairly before the Senate. In the working out of even of marine and fire insurance, he said, there were many instances where the policy was secured and the money, but the general principle of insurance was so systemically accepted that he had a desire to invade the prerogative of insurance companies. With reference to life insurance, however, he thought Parliament should exercise great care.

The question he desired to bring to the attention of the Senate, however, did not affect the general question of insurance, but only the practice of insuring the lives of children and those incapable of taking out insurance themselves. The insurance of minors, he thought, should be made a misdemeanor, and he argued that its prohibition would be a benefit to every well-established insurance company. So important had this question of infantile insurance become in the State of Massachusetts, that a short time ago a committee of the Senate had been appointed to enquire into the question, and a bill was passed by the Senate prohibiting the practice in that State, but was defeated in the Legislature. He quoted extensively from the evidence taken before this committee, to show that the system of insuring the lives of children was a premium upon fraud and crime, and among the poorer classes led to children being neglected.

Coming to the question as it affected Canada, he quoted from an Ottawa newspaper the meeting of the special Board of Health at which the practice of insuring the lives of children was universally condemned as leading to neglect of the insured children. One of the members of the Board at that meeting had said that there were no less than 30,000 policies on children being carried in Canada. He was aware that the bulk of this business was carried on by foreign insurance companies, doing business in the country, principally the Metropolitan Company of New York.

Senator McClellan did not think there was a single Canadian company carrying on a business of insuring young children. The Senator's Committee had been apprised of the statement that 30,000 of these policies are being carried in the country. In the State of Massachusetts, he said, the Senate had extended its efforts to prohibit it, and he thought it was time for the Ontario Legislature to interfere and prevent the growth of the practice in Canada. He hoped the Government would take some steps to put a stop to this growing evil.

Don't Judge Canada by the U.S. Senator Gowen thought the general consensus of opinion was in favor of life insurance. The insurance of children in Canada was carried on with a great deal of caution. Canadian companies, he said, regarded themselves in a large measure as the custodians of the lives of the children they insured. It was quite unfair, he contended, to judge the business in Canada by its abuses in the United States. Infantile insurance was not very prevalent in Canada, and was so limited by law as to prevent the possibility of fraud. He pointed out the advantage of early insurance, and why he claimed that the practice was not abused in Canada as it was contended it was in the United States. He thought Senator McClellan was opposed to life insurance anyway.

The Ontario Law Sufficient. Senator Scott thought it was unfair to restrict the amount at which the policy was issued. He contended that the practice of insuring children was generally opposed to his particular practice. Infantile insurance, he said, had originated in Great Britain, and its object was to provide money to defray the costs of burial of children of the poor who died. The amounts were restricted, and often made payable to the undertaker. He admitted that the increasing of the amounts insured was a certain evil, but thought the same objections might be argued against all classes of life insurance. He pointed out that the attempt to prohibit insurance on the lives of children in the State of Massachusetts had been defeated by a two-thirds vote of the Legislature in the action sought, and that in the Ontario Legislature at its last session it was increased in amount of insurance, but he was not aware that any abuse of the practice existed in Canada.

Facts Do Not Warrant Interference. Senator Angus said that with the restriction of the amount at which the lives of children could be insured for under the laws of Ontario, it was ridiculous to say there could be any incentive to fraud or crime. Senator McClellan, he said, had to go to the United States for examples to illustrate the abuses he complained of, and then only gave one side of the case. He quoted from speeches delivered in the Legislature of Massachusetts in the debate on the bill to prohibit infantile insurance, the practice had not brought out evidence sufficiently strong to warrant the Legislature in abolishing the practice. So far as the question affected Canada, he thought the Ontario Act, which restricted the amount of insurance to scarcely more than sufficient to pay funeral expenses in the cases of young children, was a sufficient safeguard against abuse. There were, he said, only two Canadian companies that dealt in children's insurance, and although there was no law restricting the amount in the Province of Quebec, the companies did business in all the provinces, he understood, on the basis of the Ontario law. The only way in which the Federal Parliament could interfere in the matter would be to make infantile insurance a criminal offence, and he thought the present facts of the case did not warrant interference. Senator Boulton spoke in favor of a system of State insurance.

OF THE FIRST IMPORTANCE. Mr. Balfour on Newspaper Advertising and its Meaning to Civilization. Mr. Balfour showed true discernment when he remarked in a speech before the English Newspaper Society the other evening that the newspaper "in its capacity as an advertising agent, is after all of the first importance of any civilized society, inasmuch as it brings together the various regions of the world, and those who have something to sell and those who have something to buy."

It is not too much to say that the development of modern civilization has been assisted by no agent so powerful as the newspaper; and the progress of all trade, enterprise and invention which has distinguished this century, and more especially the last generation, has been accelerated by no means more effectual than newspaper advertising. The advertisement brings together the seller and the buyer, the supply and demand, as in former times and to a comparatively limited extent they were brought by the fairs and market days. By thus facilitating and vastly increasing their means of communication, it has helped to reduce prices, to stimulate the competition and emulation from which comes improvement in production, and to the benefit of the consumer.
