Business and Drink

Trade papers are commenting on the remarkable change in business circles with regard to drinking. Heavy drinking is neither encouraged nor tolerated as in the past. Business men are cutting it out. The number of total abstainers is on the increase. The number of moderate drinkers is declining. Up-to-date business men do not consider it good form to line up at the bar. To be a good fellow it is not necessary to "set 'em up." On the contrary, the business man who drinks is regarded with suspicion from a business standpoint, for to conduct a successful business a man requires that all his faculties be at their best, and the drinking man dulls his mind and in the end loses out. Concerning the passing of the travelling salesman with the whiskey breath and the habit of wanting to treat everybody he meets, the "Mail Order Journal" has this to say:

"Gone forever is the swaggering, joke-telling salesman—he with the whiskey breath and the cigarette-stained fingers. His place has been taken by the clean-cut, business-like gentleman, who makes his sales not by treating, joking and story-telling, but by salesmanship, or brains intelligently applied. The change is, of course, a credit to the craft, due to the inroads of advanced education. It was not many years ago that a salesman to be successful must be a good story-teller, a moderate drinker and a good liar. Now he needs polish, deportment and tact.

"The former type, in truth, did not drink because they liked it, but because it was a tool of the trade. Some drank, it is true, like the Chinaman, who exclaimed, after he bought a quart of very, execrable, cheap whiskey, 'Me no drinker for drinker; me drinker for drunkee.' Most salesmen did not drink for pleasure; they drank for business; but in the words of the Rev. Jasper, 'The world do move.' Civilization has caused this class to be tabooed in all good business circles, and the man who dissipates soon finds himself on the scrap-heap of men. Today few men who sell whiskey even drink. This proves conclusively it need not be a drinker that sells the goods, but a thinker.—'Civil League Record.'"

GREAT MEN WHO LOVED ANIMALS

More than seven hundred years have passed since St. Francis of Assisi blessed the birds and the animals and called them his "little brothers and sisters," and since that time there have always been some good men in every age who have tried to soften the hearts of their fellow-men toward their brothers in fur and feathers, and to impress them with a truer conception of their rights.

Martin Luther, the great reformer, wrote: "Christ makes the birds our masters and teachers, so that a feeble sparrow, to our great shame, stands in the Gospel as a doctor and preacher to the wisest of men."

The brothers Wesley were all animals' friends; but it was Charles, the hymn-writer, whose beautiful "Jesus lover of my soul," was inspired by a frightened bird that flew through his open window during a storm and nestled in his arms.

The Rev. John Keble, author of "The Christian Year," loved all God's handiwork, especially birds, listening intently to the nightingale singing in the garden at the close of day. It was in the garden, too, where he composed his famous poem, "The Redbreast in Church." This was inspired by a robin that spent one cold winter in church, and frequently joined in singing.

The Rev. Charles Kingsley "loved every creature that drew breath," and taught his children to love them also. Ascending the pulpit one day to preach, he suddenly disappeared from view, and was then seen returning to the vestry and opening his window to liberate a butterfly which he had found on the pulpit stairs. There was one spot on the bank at Eversley where the gardener was never allowed to mow, for it was the abode of a family of nattertoads.—Florence H. Suckling, in Our Dumb Animals.

The pupils from outside institutions of learning are about all home. We are glad to have them back.

Gilbert Christopher of North Brookfield, Queens County, is visiting his friends in Lawrencetown and Clarence.

Mrs. James Groves, of Lynn, was successfully operated on for appendicitis at the Boothby Surgical Hospital, Boston, on June 14.

A visit to the schools at the last of the year's work found all the teachers gathering up the threads of his entire year's study. The drawing in the Primary and Intermediate rooms, as well as the writing was wonderfully efficient. In the High School are fine classes of B. and D. pupils. The C. class is small, however. Surely amongst the new things there are any new ones needed, are school houses suitably equipped and groups of sufficient size to accommodate our large schools. The best work cannot be done in such environments.

Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Whitman and Mrs. Leonard Whitman drove to Prince Albert today to attend the funeral of their aunt, Mrs. John Clarke.

Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Durling, Miss Hettie Fair and brother Fred, Messrs. Fred and Clyde Bishop, Paul Durling and Miss Blanche Bishop were recent guests of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Fair.

In Dean Ramsay's "Reminiscences of Scottish Life and Character" there are many tales illustrating the caution of the Caledonian. Certainly, says the author, this cautious spirit prevailed the opinions of the Scottish architect who was called upon to erect a building in England upon the long-lease system, so common with our friend. When he found the proposal was to build upon the tenure of 999 years he quietly suggested—"Cud ye no' make it a thousand? Nine hundred and ninety-nine years 'll be slippin' awa'." But of all the cautious and careful answers we ever heard was preeminently one given by a carpenter to an old lady in Glasgow for whom he was working. She had offered him a dram, and asked him whether he would have it then or wait till his work was done. "Indeed, mem," he said, "there's been sic a power o' sudden deaths lately that I'll just tak' it noo."
