

The Mystery of Orcival

Our Serial Story

to sustain me, I was a soulless body, when chance brought me to settle down at Orcival. There I saw Lawrence; she was just fifteen, and never lived there a creature who united in herself as much intelligence, grace, innocence, and beauty. Courtois became my friend, and soon Lawrence was like a daughter to me. I doubtless loved her then, but I did not confess it to myself, for I had not read my heart clearly. She was so young, and I had gray hairs! I persuaded myself that my love for her was like that of a father and it was as a father that she cherished me. Ah, I passed many a delicious hour listening to her gentle prattle and her innocent confidences; I was happy when I saw her skipping about in my garden, picking the roses I had reared for her, and laying 'aste my parterres; and I said to myself that existence is a precious gift from God. My dream then was to follow her through life. I fancied her wedded to some good man who made her happy, while I remained the friend of the wife, after having been the confidant of the maiden I took good care of my fortune which is considerable, because I thought of her children, and wished to hoard up treasures for them. Poor, poor Lawrence!

M. Lecoq flinched in his chair, rubbed his face with his handkerchief, and seemed ill at ease. He was really much more touched than he wished to appear. "One day," pursued the old man, "my friend Courtois spoke to me of her marriage with Tremorel; then I measured the depth of my love. I felt terrible agonies which it is impossible to describe; it was like a long-suffered fire which suddenly breaks forth and devours everything. To be old, and to love a child! I thought I was going crazy; I tried to reason, to upbraid myself, but it was of no avail. What can reason or irony do against passion? I kept silent and suffered. To crown all, Lawrence selected me as her confidant—what torture! She came to me to talk of Hector; she admired in him all that seemed to her superior to other men, so that none could be compared with him. She was enchanted with his bold horseback riding, and thought everything he said sublime."

"Did you know what a wretch Tremorel was?"

"Alas I did not yet know it. What was this man who lived at Valfeuil to me? But from the day that I learned ed that he was going to deprive me of my most precious treasure, I began to study him. I should have been some-what consoled if I had found him worthy of her; so I dogged him, as you, M. Lecoq, cling to the criminal whom you are pursuing. I went often to Paris to learn what I could of his past life; I became a detective, and went about questioning everybody who had known him, and the more I heard of him the more I despised him. It was thus that I found out his interviews with Jenny and his relations with Bertha."

"Why didn't you divulge them?"

"Honor commanded silence. Had I a right to dishonor my friend, and ruin his happiness and life, because of this ridiculous, hopeless love? I kept my own counsel after speaking to Courtois about Jenny, at which he only laughed. When I hinted something against Hector to Lawrence, she almost ceased coming to see me."

"Ah! I shouldn't have had either your patience or your generosity."

"Because you are not as old as I, M. Lecoq. Oh, I cruelly hated this Tremorel! I said to myself, when I saw three women of such different characters smitten with him, 'What is there in him to be so loved?'"

"Yes," answered M. Lecoq, responding to a secret thought, "women often err; they don't judge men as we do."

"Many a time," resumed the justice of the peace, "I thought of provoking him to fight with me, that I might kill him; but then Lawrence would not have looked at me any more. However I should perhaps have spoken at last, had not Sauvresy fallen ill and died. I knew that he had made his wife and Tremorel swear to marry each other; I knew that a terrible reason forced them to keep their oath; and I thought Lawrence saved. Alas, on the contrary, she was lost! One evening, as I was passing the mayor's house, I saw a man getting over the wall into the garden; it was Tremorel. I recognized him perfectly. I was beside myself with rage, and swore that I would wait and murder him. I did wait, but he did not come out that night."

M. Plantat hid his face in his hands; his heart beat at the recollection of that night of anguish, the whole of which he had passed in waiting for a man in order to kill him. M. Lecoq trembled with indignation.

UP IN THE AIR BUT NOT AVIATORS

Thrilling Aerialists and Clever Comedians at Nova Scotia Exhibition

An air show, which is not an aviation meet but quite as exciting, will feature the vaudeville at the Nova Scotia Provincial Exhibition (Halifax, August 27th—Sept. 3rd). Twenty acrobatic stars, direct from New York, will participate in the most sensational program of aerial gymnastics ever presented in breathlessly dramatic fashion.

A beautiful woman sliding six hundred feet, suspended only by her teeth, will be just one of the thrills. The four lovely Aerial Queens will nonchalantly perform 110 feet above terra firma. High flyers, too, are the five Flying Columbians, tossing each other dangerously but expertly between trapezes hung at dizzy heights. The Arontys will amazingly risk life and limb from the summit of a ten uous, teetering pole, while closer to earth, the Helen Bach Trio offer an extraordinary tripartite equilibristic feature.

The breath-taking tension of these thrills will be relieved by side-splitting comedy. Moran and Weiser, whose boomerang hats are uncanny as well as laughable, are a standard big time vaudeville turn. The inimitable duo of Cuby and Smith balanced upon each other's hands incredibly, difficulty, grotesquely. The Three Maskers cavort merrily in a ground acrobatic feature. To still a third entertainment note Jack and Virginia will appear in artistic plastic poses.

All of these acts have scored tremendously in the finest theatres and at the biggest fairs on the continent. They will give the Provincial Exhibition a thrill and mirth-packed vaudeville program in addition to the Six Days of Horse Racing, the Nova Scotia Department Store, the Native Sportsman's Zoo, the Cavalcade of Champion Cattle, the Dog and Horse Shows and other features which will make Nova Scotia's Big Show for 1934 the greatest ever.
