The President has received a letter from the members of the family of the late Professor Young, conveying their grateful appreciation of the whole arrangements of the Funeral Service in Convocation Hall, on Friday, the 1st of March; and especially requesting that their thanks be conveyed to the students of the University for all they have done in their desire to pay fitting honour to the memory of their loved teacher.

LITERARY SOCIETY.

Friday, March 1st. Our first meeting in March has, "from time whereof man's memory runneth not to the contrary, been the occasion, and not neglected, for a furious clashing of many policies. Not a student-popular whim, grudge, notion of progress or conservatism, not a scheme or anti-schemery but has itself published on our first meeting in March. The Literary is the mirror of undergraduate feeling.

But to-night the mirror showed back sombre images which may the years be many before we see again. Showed back the dispirited groups of students and that silent lecture room, silent, too, with such a stillness after so echoing to the old professor's words. Reflected the man's last going forth from Convocation Hall where such cheers were wont to greet his entry.

Mr. Cody rose and was spokesman for an unanimous meeting—aye, and a single-hearted undergraduate body, when he moved a resolution telling our sense of loss, in the death of Professor Young. And when President Creelman rose to put the motion according to customary form and, himself a coin stamped with that venerable image - one of the mintage of '82,—told what lay in his memory concerning the Professor as he flourished in the early years of this decade, -when the President showed us that the regard wherein the man was ever held had already in those days deepened into that veneration of him living that now is the best eulogy of him dead,then we could be sure that our resolution was a speech that might drop from the lips of any that are or have been 'Varsity students. And thus, having done an evening's work that was a duty to ourselves, we were content to adjourn and do ourselves honour by revering Professor Young.
