

The Government's response to the report of the Standing Committee on Foreign Affairs and International Trade is a comprehensive document that outlines the government's commitment to human rights and international trade. The report, which was released in 2005, was a landmark document that highlighted the need for a more robust and coordinated approach to human rights and international trade. The government's response is a direct result of the report's findings and recommendations. It is a document that is both timely and relevant, and it is a testament to the government's commitment to human rights and international trade. The government's response is a document that is both comprehensive and detailed, and it is a document that is both clear and concise. It is a document that is both a reflection of the government's values and a statement of its commitment to human rights and international trade. The government's response is a document that is both a reflection of the government's values and a statement of its commitment to human rights and international trade. The government's response is a document that is both a reflection of the government's values and a statement of its commitment to human rights and international trade.

DOCS
CA1 EA 2005E92 ENG
Government response to the Report of the Standing Committee on Foreign Affairs and International Trade : exploring Canada's 16815975(E)
.B3740948(E)