The Earlard. THE LILIES OF THE FIELD.

"Consider the lilies of the field,"—Holy Writ. Each at the dawn appears its silver chalice, When day's bright sunbeams in the dewy valleys, Gems that make bright the sweet sequestered valleys, Gaze that moist and sparkling dew, and creation, Some forth with smiles complacently and fair, They are the lilies of the field, and they are bright children of the spring, were there? Ye come to bless the eye when sin had clouded The glorious earth with rain pale and wan; Ye come to cheer the heart when sin had shrouded With pearl and dew the fate of man; Ye come to whisper, with your living beauty, A lesson to the hearts that, domineering stray; To win the spirit to a tramping duty, And guide the wanderer's steps in wisdom's way! What thought your accents, gentle, sweet, and lowly, Into the silent ear, so soft and lowly, Ye whisper words of love and joy, To wake the fair feelings of the heart! Most lovely of the flowers, ye are the lilies of the field, Of the Creator's love, with pallid hue, For Solomon, with all his pomp and glory, Was not so arrayed like any one of you! Ye neither soil nor stain—yet God hath made you To smile and blossom in the sunny bow, In nature's silver robes he hath arrayed you, Fair as the fairest thing of Eden's bow, When first the sun dispelled the primal gloom, And God's own Spirit breathed the life— Reheer than fabrics of the human loom! Ay! ye have lessons for the wise, recalling Traits that proclaim Jehovah's bounteous love; And wisdom then grows wiser, and feeling, How all that's good, and all that's true, Ye teach the thoughtful and with pure emotion, When contemplation with you lingers near; Ye fill the heart with love, and wisdom, And awaken a moral and true cry! To Him whose word spoke virtue into being, Who fit the sun, and bade the planets roll, Who gave the world its places, as probably our great Creator of the universal whole! To Him, with you, we render thanks for pleasures Which he has sent us, and for wisdom, And you, ye gentle, smiling things, are treasures That win our love, and wake our gratitude. JAMES HENDERSON, Glasgow, February, 1847.

Miscellaneous. The New Parliament Houses—Ornaments.

The British Parliament appointed Commissioners upon the Fine Arts, to make arrangements for the decoration of the new Houses of Parliament, which event is looked upon as an important feature in the history of British Art. St. Stephen's Church (says the London Herald), is to be adorned by four statues; two of the pedestals are ornamented by paintings of great beauty, and are not unoccupied. As peace and war are recommended as subjects for the painting for this part of the buildings, why should not the statues of Howard and Pitt be placed in the same niches, as they are apostle and worker of charity. St. Stephen's Hall, as the site of the old House of Commons, is to be adorned by twelve statues of men who have risen to eminence by their industry, industry and eloquence. On the walls are to be paintings illustrating great constitutional, social, and ecclesiastical events. "A Sitting of the Wittenagemote," "The Honours of the Barons to William the Conqueror," "The Flight of King Charles," "The Termination of the Barons' War by the Crowning of Henry the Second on Bosworth Field," "An early Trial by Jury," "The Triumph of the Church over the Pope," "The Coronation of King George the Third," "The Coronation of King George the Fourth," "The Coronation of King
