Law is a complicated thing, and so ions seem not to be founded in equity. Probably most readers will pass that criticism upon the case recorded be-

Basutoland, being broken and mountain ous, was until recently the resort of lions, leopards and other wild animals. Now, however, the billsides which were once the resort of these savage creatures are the pasture grounds of tens of thousands of cattle. Nearly all dangerous animals have peen driven away from Basutoland, but not long ago a leopard appeared on the outskirts of a village. The animal soon became as badly frightened as the villagers and sought safety in flight.

The next moraing the inhabitants turned out for a hunt. One of the hunters was climbing a steep rock when he suddenly found bimsel! tace to face with the eopard, whose retreat was cut off by the rock itself. Neither the man nor the animal could escape the encounter.

The dilemma was an awkward one, for the climber was una med. Recognizing his danger, he put torth his hands and in desperation caught hold of the leopard on each side of its jaws, holding it at arm's length and calling for help. The leopard clawed and tore his captor, but the man held on ('ll help arrived and the beast was

Now came a question of law. By Basu-to law the skin belonged to the chief, who must reward one of three claimants must reward one of three claimants—either the man who speared the leopard, or the man who held it so that it was possible to spear it, or the man who, being warned by the barking of his dog, first discovered the animal in the village.

The Rasuto Solomon decided the case follows. The man who are detected.

as follows: The man who speared it could not have done so but for the man who held it, and the man who held it could not have the second of the existence if the dog had not first warned the villiage; therefore the credit for the killing belonged to the dog, whose owner was entitled to the reward.

Collier's Weekly tells of an old farmer who had [been to the metropolis, and was describing to bis triends the splendor of the hotel at which he stayed.
