THE SALT OF THE EARTH

(From the Mail and Empire)

There are at all times and in all countries people who deserve to be called the salt of the earth. Happy is the nation that in the present time of world confusion and unrest can count such people by the million. For our part we cling to the idea that in this respect Canada is more favored than some other lands. The influence of such people is preservative of the good that is in society. It counteracts the agents and reagents that are always at work for corrupting public opinion and producing social decay.

The sound-headed, right-hearted, self-controlled men and women who keep the interests of the commonwealth in mind and who try to deal justly by their neighbors are truly the salt of the earth. They are not led astray by vanity or eaten up by envy or given over to covetousness. They hold fast to the wise teachings of their youth and of the experience of life. Industry, thrift, self-denial, honesty and prudence have been found by these people to be the cardinal virtues of citizenship on its economic side. True, honesty is a moral quality, but these people have proved that the proverb, "Honesty is the best policy," is not more open to question than the truism that honesty is the best morality. The people who are more concerned to see that their own duties are rightly performed than to keep account of the doings or misdoings of their neighbors set an example that will not be lost upon those for whose bringing up they are responsible, nor upon those with whom their daily intercourse brings them in contact. We look to the conduct of the men and women of sane judgment, simple piety and firm patriotism to correct the extravagances of the time.

That there is a moral sense at work in the social ferment of today is not to be denied. A feeling that they are getting less than their fair share of the good things of life lies at the bottom of many men's present discontent. But it is not by wildness or revolutionism that a better distribution can be brought about. The hope of every man who desires to mend his lot lies in the preservation of public order and the maintenance of law. If laws fall short of the requirements of equity, they can be amended by a democracy of self-helpful citizens. It is all very well to desire a fair share of the good things of life, but the people who give their thoughts too much to material things and to love of ease tend to become not a wholesome but a vicious influence in the community. Is it not against the flagrant display of so many of our wealthy people that much of the existing discontent has arisen? The remedy for what now ails society is not more luck for the average man, but more of moral government in the world. Too many of us are unworthily piping for more leisure, more ease, more luxury. The more the rank and file get of these things the more do they themselves decline in virtue and usefulness and the more rotten does society tend to become. That element in the community described as the salt of the earth is needed for the salvation of society, upon whose raw wounds the microbes of dissolution are constantly fastening.

Canada has no lack of citizens belonging to the saving remnant. What is required is that more publicity be given to their part in the life of the nation. It is the greatest part, measured by what measure soever, whether by the test of economic production, of heroic sacrifice, educational achievement, or the general estimation in which the nation is held by its fellows. It must therefore be that the great majority of our people are to be classed as of the salt of this Canadian earth. Too little mention is made of the part the solid and righteous forces of the community are playing, and too much is made of the sayings and doings of the malcontents. The latter are but a small percentage of the whole, but they are infecting the minds of not a few people who by character really belong to the forces of redemption. Many young inquirers of keen minds are misled by the sophistries of demagogues. There are men in this country who are contriving for the overthrow of the established order of society, and there are among them other men who have no malice in them, but who have been deceived. Well may men of good will but of unseasoned judgment be deceived when among the holders out of false lights are persons who have been licensed to preach the gospel, men of shallow understandings with an itch for notoriety. It is not by ranters or dogmatists that the troubles of the time are to be dispelled, but by the example of the great body of the citizens who make no pretence of being better or knowing more than other people, but who do believe in work, honesty, thrift and good husbandry and who do not let go of the truths of Christianity.
