

IN AFTER YEARS.

I do not ask a moment's pause,
In duty's hour;
Nor yet, when you would choose to seek
Fair pleasure's bower,
To turn the leaves of memory back
Some years of time,
And live again some golden days,
In memory's prime.

But when you find a leisure hour
With nought to do,
'Tis then, that I would kindly claim
A thought from you;
'Tis then, that I would have you climb
The heath-clad hill,
And look upon the scenes I see
In memory still.

Or gather wild flowers by the way,
And heather bloom,
To deck anew with nosegay sweet,
The cosy room,
Where oft we sat at even-time,
In friendly chat,
Discussing all the pros and cons
Of this and that.

Just in the good, old-fashioned way,
Artless and free;
So kindly differing, where we
Could not agree.
'Twas thus that time, on viewless wing,
Did quickly fly;
Until at last, with some regrets,
We said good-bye.

Yet oft, in my new-world home
So dear to me,
My fancy turns to that fair land
Beyond the sea;
Where nature, in her wildest mood
Doth reign supreme;
On towering mountain, deep dells,
And rushing stream.
