A Halffax despatch of the 10th says:
Another victim of the Chezsetcook fire, by which the store and dwelling of John G.
Byrd were destroyed, has died from the highing received. The little boy, previously burned, as particulars show, fell through a hole burned in the floor and emught en a beam. To this he clung, pitoously calling "Mamma" until his hands west burned off, when, with a terrible shriek, he fell into the mass of fire below. His mother fainted, and his agonized father looked on unable to rander his boy any amistance.
