Why Socks Have Clocks.

It is surprising how much of the past still remains, more especially in regard to the clothes we wear.

On the backs of most gloves will be found three thin strips. These marks correspond to the fourchette pieces between the fingers. In earlier times gloves were not made so neatly as they are to-day, and the stitching of the fingers was carried down part of the way onto the back of the glove, braud being used to conceal the seams. To a practically similar reason does the clock on a sock owe its origin. In the days when stockings were made of cloth the seams occurred where the clocks are now displayed, the decoration being utilised to hide the seams.

The little bow which will invariably be found in the leather band inside a man's hat is a survival of the time when a hat was made by taking a piece of leather, boring two holes through it, and drawing it together with a piece of string.

Hankercieft were not always square. At one time they were shaped to the user's fancy. It chanced that this irregularity displeased Queen Marie Antoinette, who suggested one winter evening at Versailles that a uniform shape would be an indication of good taste. The result was a decree by Louis XVI, issued in the early days of 1785, enacting that all pocket-hankercieft should have right-angled edges henceforward.

Very short underskirts are worn with the new frocks.

As He Might Write It Now.

Drink to me only with thine eyes;
No use to look for wine,
There is no kick within the cup,
No ferment in the vine.
The thirist that from my soul doth rise
Doth ask a bar benign;
No soda fountain slop nor sup
Can match the foaming stein.
I sent thee late an empty jug,
Not so much honoring thee,
As sending it in hope that thou
Wouldest make it full for me.
But thou hast tip't in gainst thy mug
And send'st it back to me
As hollow in its heart, I vow,
As 'e'en thy head could be!

Nearly Ate Pin.

A young man at Portugal Cove narrowly escaped serious injury a few days ago. He was eating a bar of milk chocolate, when a pin of about two inches long, with a white bead head pierced his tongue. He suffered considerable pain and it was some time before he could extract it. The moral is obvious. Candy manufacturers should see that the makers of the candy do not have pins about their persons when engaged at this work.

Binard's Liniment Cures Diphtheria.

Wills and Wonts.

Even the great Duke of Marlborough could not resist the temptation of a farewell "slap" at his duchess when he left her £10,000, "where-with to spoil Blenheim in her own way, and £15,000 to keep clean and go to law with."

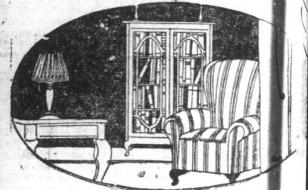

William Darley, of Ash, bequeathed to his spouse, "for picking my pocket of 60 guineas, the sum of one shilling." And the will of Chas. Parker, a London bookseller, contains this clause: "I give to Elizabeth Parker the sum of £50, whom, through my foolish fondness, I made my wife, without regard to family, fame, or fortune, and who, in return, has not spared, most unjustly, to accuse me of every crime except robbery."

A Yorkshire testator thus indulges his humour at the expense of his widow's feelings and pocket "During my married life I have always declared that my wife was the dearest woman in the world, and I am convinced that should anyone be rash enough to marry her after my death he will find her so. To deter as far as possible anyone making such a ruinous experiment, I leave her nothing."
