

MOTHER! BREAK CHILD'S COLD

Hurry! Move Little Bowels with "California Fig Syrup"

No matter what else you give your child to relieve a bad cold, sore throat or congestion, be sure to first open the little one's bowels with "California Fig Syrup" to get rid of the poisons and waste which are causing the cold and congestion. In a few hours you can see for yourself how thoroughly it works the constipation poison, sour bile and waste right out.

Even if you call your family physician he will praise you for having given "California Fig Syrup" as the laxative because it never fails, never cramps or overacts, and even sick children love its pleasant taste. Ask your druggist for genuine "California Fig Syrup" which has directions for babies and children of all ages printed on bottle. Mother! You must say "California" or you may get an imitation fig syrup.

LADY LAURAS' RELEASE

THE STORY OF A SPOILED BEAUTY.

CHAPTER XXXVII

It did not seem to reach human ears, for there was no response. The water had by this time half filled the boat, and it was gradually sinking. "I have to die!" she moaned. "Oh, Heaven—oh, mother—I have to die!" In another few minutes the boat must sink, and she should never see her mother's beloved face again. Another long, sharp cry floated over the water, and this time the cry of distress caught the ears of one who hastened in the direction from which it proceeded.

CHAPTER XXXVIII

Major Norton had not gone to Hatfield, after all. When he had ridden two or three miles, he remembered suddenly that he had started without the very article that he had intended to take. There was nothing for it but to ride back to the Abbey and get it. Vexed with himself for his own stupidity, he rode quickly. The shortest route to the house, but one seldom used, was through the grounds skirting the end of the lake; and it was whilst taking this short cut that he heard a sharp ringing cry, as of some one in terrible distress. He rode swiftly in the direction whence it proceeded, and as soon as he came in full view of the lake, he perceived what had happened. He saw Angela in the boat, and he saw that the boat was rapidly sinking. It was but the work of a minute to dismount, to jump into one of the little boats lying close at hand, to seize a pair of oars and to fly, as it were, over the water to her assistance. But although the major made the utmost haste, he was only just in time. In another moment he would have been too late. As it was, he was barely able to catch the disappearing figure as the boat sunk, sunk to the bottom of the lake, endangering the safety of his own as it did so. During the trying ordeal Angela had borne herself bravely; but she trembled violently now, and clung nervously to her rescuer for some minutes.

"I thought my time was come to die," she said, slowly.

"You could hardly be nearer death than you have been," returned the major, for he knew how narrow her escape had been. "How did it happen?" he asked, as she seated her in his boat.

"I do not know," she replied.

"We must make haste," said the major. "You are wet through, and the water is cold. Do not fear, you are all right and safe now. We shall soon be at the house. Thank Heaven, I did not go on to Hatfield! My dear Miss Rooden," he added, solemnly, "if I had gone straight on my way, you would have been drowned."

"Drowned!" The word distressed her, yet she knew what the major said was true; and, as in a dream, all the details of the accident at Hatfield Pool came back to her. It flashed across her mind that this was the second time that she had been dragged, as it were, from the jaws of death.

The major rowed with powerful strokes, and the boat seemed to fly over the water.

"This is the second narrow escape I have had within the last two months," Angela told her rescuer. "I said nothing of the first, lest my mother should be alarmed. I do not think," she continued, with a shudder, "that I shall ever go on the water again."

"Yes; it was the new boat," she answered, slowly.

"But I saw Jones with it on the river last night," said the major; "it was all right then."

"It was all right with me at first," she remarked. "I was half way across the lake before I knew there was anything wrong; then I felt the water rising round my feet."

"Thank Heaven I did not go to Hatfield," repeated the major.

"I can only imagine," said Angela, "that part of a plank had been repaired, and that the wood had not been properly secured."

"But it was right enough when Jones had it. If there had been anything seriously wrong, he would have found it out," declared the major.

"Perhaps he would if he had used the boat an hour longer," suggested Angela. She was sorely troubled and perplexed over this second accident, though she could hardly tell why.

It was impossible to prevent Lady Laura from hearing of this affair, although the other had been carefully concealed from her; but Angela would not allow her to be told until she had changed her wet clothes, and then she went to her mother's room and related what had happened herself.

Her ladyship listened with tears. "I have been sitting here reading, and you have been so near death!" she cried. "Oh, Angel, if I had known!"

Angela tried to speak lightly of it; but Lady Laura trembled, as she thought of the narrow escape her daughter had had. She could not show the girl enough love. She held her in her arms as though she were a child again—she kissed her repeatedly. She made her tell over and over again how the major had rescued her just in time, and had rescued her from her peril. Then, as did every one else who heard the story, she asked:

"But how did it happen, Angela?" There was but the same strange vague answer to give.

"I cannot understand it," said her ladyship. "If the boat was safe for Jones why was it not safe for you? How vexed the captain will be."

Yes, the captain would be vexed undoubtedly, Angela reflected, since it was he himself who had ordered the boat to be prepared for her; and who had that very morning persuaded her to go out upon the water.

As a matter of course, the subject was discussed at length in the servants' hall. To the occupants of that part of the establishment it appeared remarkable that two accidents upon the water should happen to their young mistress, both bringing her so near death. One imparted to another how anxious the captain had been during breakfast, and how many warnings and cautions he had given Miss Rooden before she went upon the lake. The general impression was—although not any of the servants wished in any way to breathe a word against their young mistress—that Miss Rooden was apt to be rather reckless on the water.

Jones' anger and annoyance knew no bounds. The boats were left in his charge, and he was responsible for them, nevertheless he was utterly at a loss to account for what had happened.

"That boat was right enough when I had it on the river last evening," he said, looking perplexed and bewildered. "The captain he said to me, 'Jones, that boat is coming back to-day—the one that has been done up for Miss Rooden. Look it well over; and try it on the river the night before she uses it.' So I did; and I can swear there was nothing wrong. If there had been a hole in the bottom of it, it would have sunk then. I can't make it out."

Nor could any one else; for the more the matter was discussed the more difficult it became to assign any reason for the sudden failure of the boat.

While Lady Laura rejoiced over her child as one given back to her from the dead, while she poured out such lavish thanks to the major that he felt ashamed almost of his own brave deed, while Lady Bell talked of and wondered over Angela's latest escape, a man on horseback drew near the house, riding very slowly, a look of expectation on his face as he glanced around, as though every moment he expected some one to spring up and give him startling news. But no one appeared. He rode even more slowly up the great drive, still looking anxiously from one side to the other. As he came in sight of the grand old Abbey he cast a hurried glance up at the blinds. No; they were not drawn down in deathlike array. But perhaps—there could be no telling—the truth might not yet be known.

He rode leisurely into the courtyard, but there again he failed to notice any confusion or excitement. Nothing was wrong; no unusual sight or sound broke the quiet of the place.

His face darkened as he contemplated the likelihood of the miscarriage of his last scheme.

"Can I have failed again?" he said to himself. "It is impossible!" (To be continued.)

ECZEMA IN RASH FOR 9 YEARS

On Scalp, Arms and Limbs. Lost Rest. Cuticura Heals.

"Eczema broke out in a rash on my scalp, arms and limbs. The itching and burning were terrific. My hair became lifeless and dry and fell out in handfuls. My clothing aggravated the breaking out, and I could not rest at night on account of the irritation. "The trouble lasted about nine years. My mother tried many different remedies but they did no good. We began using Cuticura Soap and Ointment which completely healed me." (Signed) Miss Beatrice M.
