At parting, Lady Ara had said kindly, yet gravely:
"My dear Catherine, for your own sake "My dear Catherine, for your own sake try and cultivate a more Christian spirit. Do not forget that we are 'liable to entertain angels unawares,' and that kindness is due to everyone; not that I really mean that Tiga is an angel," her ladyship added, fearing she was putting it too strong, "for I suppose she has some faults, since no one is without them; but it would have been such a comfort to you low, to remember that you had been a friend to your brother's child at a time when she most needed friends and sympathy. Good-by, my dear. I trust the time will come when you will be willing to be at peace with me."

Gertrude would have been glad to make her peace then and there with the pld lady, and her cheek burned with shame as she remembered her rude, unfeeling speech of the previous day; but her mother could neither forget nor forgive the loss of so much gold, and she averiad her way.

They returned to Carisford for awhile, but removed soon after to Lady Ariesbury's own town house, which had fallen to her upon the death of her hus-

It may be as well to state here, that although her ill-nature and bitterness rankled in her heart for a long time, yet the unvarying sweetness and courtesy of Tina, whenever they chanced to meet, which they often did in society, at last proved too much for her; and when at length, on the occasion of Gertrude's marriage with a young and wealthy baronet, two years later, she sent her an exquisite piece of lace, all the work of her own hands, together with a rare and lovely set of ornaments, as a bridai gift, her ladyship's heart was softened, and she confessed her sorrow for the wrong she had done her in the past, while Gertrude was made very happy to be allowed to become friendly with her while Gertrude was made very happy to be allowed to become friendly with her beautiful cousin, toward whom her heart had long yearned.

Upon this evidence of their improvement, and the cultivation of the "milk of human kindness," Lady Ara's heart was moved, and at the earnest solicitation of Tina she gave the young bride-elect a handsome dower, with a little bit of friendly advice to sesson it.

"Auntie," Gertrude said, with tears in her eyes at this evidence of Lady Ara's her eyes at this evidence of Lady Ara's returning favor. "I hope you will not think I'm ungrateful, but—I really wish you had not given me this money."

"Well, well, child, it seems to me I can't suit you anyway. You've all been at swords' points with me for the last two years because you didn't get any of my money and now I've given you some my money, and now I've given you some you don't like it. What does it mean?" and the old lady eyed her sharply, al-though she felt sure that the tears in those blue eyes must have a deeper meaning than appeared on the surface.

"I was afraid I should wound you," Gertrude said, deprecatingly, "and I can't explain, perhaps, just what I mean;
but I really have been trying to live better during these last two years; and I have been so ashamed of the way I

Lady Ara's arms were around the fair

"That confession is worth a dozen fortunes, my dear," she said, and from that moment they were the best of friends.

Louis Arlesbury, deeply mortified by the part he had played in Tina's history, went abroad immediately upon learning of her marriage with Lord Holborn, and of her relatiosthin to him and did not of her relationship to him, and did not return until recalled to his sister's wed-

When they met the past was politely ignored, although the young and beautiful Lady Holborn always treated him with a certain high-bred reserve which he could never overcome.

Two other matters need a word of explanation. The card which Lord Holborn had picked up in Monsieur La Fort's lace establishment, and on the back of which had been written those words which had puzzled the Frenchman so, was the one upon which Tina, or the Lady Althea, had written the message to the princess after their stormy interview, and which had been sent back to her untouched.

She had absently gathered it was group. She had absently gathered it up among some other papers that she had put into her traveling bag on leaving the palace, and where she had afterward found it: and supposing it to be a blank card—not thinking to examine the other side—she had written upon it the name that she intended to adopt, and had thus given it to monsiour

Lady Ara's letter to her brother, which ha' been postmarked at Modena, Italy, had really been written in London and then sent to someone whom she knew at Modena, to be remailed to Carisford; and thus the family there supposed her to be hundreds of miles away, while in reality she had long been near them, critically studying the r character and learning of their past lives.

CHAPTER XLL

Lord Holborn's mother appeared all at once to be very fond and proud of her new daughter, and, in justice to her, it must be said that it was not wholly on account of the strange discoveries that had recently been made proving her, if anything, superior to her own family, but with her pride once humbled she ex-

Ariesbury foresaw she would, the admired of all Belgravia—not only for her beauty and accomplishments, but for her gentle graciousness toward all with whom she came in contact.

People thought it a little strange that the earl and his daughter had never mentioned the fact of his son's marriage or of his having a child; but they were too polite to inquire very much into the matter, and took it for granted that Lady Ara had been in the secret, and had had something to do with her education, since, as everyone believed, they had returned together from abroad, and Tina was her acknowledged heiress. No one in all that fashionable world knew anything of her previous connection with Lady Arlesbury, nor of the trials to which she was subjected while there.

trials to which she was subjected while there.

When Lord Holborn was questioned as to where he had first met his charming wife, he answered unhesitatingly: "In Belgium's capital during my travels the previous year," and no one thought there was anything strange in that.

Some little surprise was expressed regarding their very quiet wedding; but this was laid to Lady Ara's eccentricity and her penchant for surprises, and thus much that would have been very unpleasant to be gossiped about was never known.

pleasant to be gossiped about was never known.

Lady Holborn's reception was "the affair" of the season, and the beautiful bride the cynosure of all eyes.

She wore that night a dress of white velvet with garnet trimmings of velvet, and iridescent fringes; while great glowing carbuncles, set with pearls, encircled her slender throat, her arms and gleamed in her ears. These vivid contrasts were exceedingly becoming to her clear complexion and rare style of beauty, and she was dazzlingly beautiful.

She was standing near the entrance to the drawing-room quite early in the evening, talking with a group of young people, when some witticism caused her to break into a clear, silvery laugh that was full of merriment.

"I remember that laugh," he muttered; "I remember that laugh," he muttered; "no one could ever hear it once and forget it." And, button-holing a friend near by, he asked to be presented to the young lady who had just laughed so musically. "Lady Holborn." said the mutual friend, approaching her with the gentleman on his arm, "allow me to introduce the Honorable —, United States consul to England," and Tina found herself face to face with the individual whom she had met in the Hotel d'Europe in Brussels, when she went to take Lady Holborn's shawl to her, and who had been so concerned about the failing sight of the English nobility.

That scene came back to her so forcibly that she had difficulty in maintaining a decorous gravity during the introduction.

He gave her a comical glance as she thus recalled his own words, and wondered how she had happened to become an English "lady."

Tina, however, changed the subject, while she wondered how her ladyship would appear when she should discover that the American consul, whose presence she had been so anxious to secure at her reception, on account of the big position which he occupied in the literary circles of London, was none other than the "thoroughbred Yankee" whom she had so audaciously inspected and criticised in the reception-room of the Hotel d'Europe.

GROWS MORE COMPLICATED. Cincinnati, O., Feb. 9.-The situation is more complicated than ever tonight regarding the contests here next Friday night between Martin and Childs and Jeffries and Ruhlin. It was thought that arguments would be completed tonight before Judge Hollister on the application for a neumaneut injunction against the arguments would be completed tonight before Judge Hollister on the application for a permanent injunction against the proposed contest. The attorneys, however, insisted on so much time for arguments that another day will be spent in hearing them, and the case will not be finally submitted to Judge Hollister until Monday evening. It is hardly possible that Judge Hollister will then be ready to render his decision on Tuesday morning, and if he shall hold it back until Wednesday or Thursday, there will be very little time for the proposed appeal to the nigher courts. Meantime, there are all sorts of rumors about other proceedings, including an action against Madden and Brady for perjury, and especially against the former. During the arguments this afternoon Judge Peck insisted that the proceedings should be in a criminal court rather than one of equity, and asked why Brady, Madden, Cook and others who were in the court room were not arrested and held the same as Jeffries and Ruhlin had been two weeks ago. Counsel for the state replied that such might be the case further on. All the preparations, as well as the training, are proceeding for the context the All the preparations, as well as the training, are proceeding for the contest the same as if no injunction proceedings were pending or no opposition from the governor was existing. CANADIAN TROTTING CIRCUIT.

A meeting of representatives from different tuif associations was held at the Windsor Hotel, Stratford, on Thursday afternoon, for the purpose of fixing dates for the Canadian trotting circuit. Those present were: James Johnston, Guelph; T. B. Puddicombe, R. B. Puddicombe, Wm. Bishop, T. F. Robb, New Hamburg; M. Broderick, Scaforth; J. Swartz, Wingham; Dr. Whiteman. — Saults, Goderich; G. G. McPherson, K.C., M. J. Dillon, T. S. Tobin, Stratford; Listowel was represented by Mr. T. S. Tobin. Mr. T. S. Tobin was re-elected secretary for the circuit, and the following dates were fixed for the race meetings: New Hamburg, June 4, 5 and 6; Guelph, June, II, 12 and 13; London, June 18, 19 and 20; Wingham, June 26 and 27; Stratford, July 1, 2 and 3; Seaforth, July 9 and 10; Goderich, July 17 and 18. Listowel and Wingham both claimed dates the same week, but the meeting voted in favor of Wingham. It is not known whether Listowel will hold its races that week, or wait until after the Goderich meet. It will be to the disadvantage and loss of both if their races take place the same week.

IN THE COURTS

IN THE COURTS. London, Feb. 9.-Justice Grantham has

granted an injunction against Lady Wm. Beresford (formerly Lillian, Duchess of Marlborough) entering of running in any races, or selling the Derby favorite, Volodrovski, or other horses leased by the late Lord Wm. Beresford from Lady Meux. As executrix, Lady Beresford claimed the right to fulfill the engagements of the horses. Lady Meux contended that the lease lapsed with the death of Lord Beresford. Notice of appeal was given. Lady Meux, who races horses under the name of "Mr. Theobalds," has also commenced action to recover her horses. Volodrovski is the favorite for the Derby next June. The grounds for the action taken to recover possession of the horse is that under the Jockey Club rules the lessor and lessee become partners, and, as the death of a partner ends the partnership, the executrix of Lord William Bere-ford has no assignable interest in the horse. When the case was first talked of about three weeks ago, the opinion prevailed in England that if the partnership is proved the horse will revert to "Mr. Theobalds."

OPEN DECLARATION OF WAR.

San Francisco, Feb. 9.—An open declaration of war on the Oakland race track, made by the San Francisco Jockey Club, in control of Tanforan Park, has stirred up much excitement among horsemen on the Pacific coast. President Williams, of the California Jockey Club, which manages the Oakland course, expressed great surprise at the statement that racing would be continued at Tanforan next week, in view of the contract existing between the two tracks to race a fortnight alternately. So far as the owners of horses are concerned, he says, they can race at both tracks without any protest from his club. Special inducements will be offered, however, at Oakland. The only feature of the war between the two tracks today was the address of Prince Poniatowski, president of the San Francisco Jockey Club, to the horsemen at Tanforan. He defined the position of the association, and told the owners that they must choose between the two tracks. Horses racing at Oakland would not be allowed to run at Tanforan. What a handsome pair is Jack Dashaway and his wife. It does one good to see them. Invari-

sia. Hutch is the best thing yet. You can ably in a good humor, they are the envy of the whole town. It all comes from their both being in such splendid health. They both swear by Hutch. That's the secret of their happiness. Rather it is no secret. They both speak about Hutch to every one they know. Hutch? Why Hutch is the great cure for dyspep-carry a little package of Hutch in your vest or watch pocket and always have one whenever you need it. Wouldn't you like to try one now? I always carry one with me. Never mind thanks. Get some of the Hutch for yourself and use one whenever you experience a passing discomfort.
