SEES DISASTER IF

Viscount Grey Gives Views on Washington Parley.

London, Nov. 11.-Failure by the Washington armament conference to attain the ends for which it was summoned would be a great disaster, Vis-count Grey declares in an article con-tributed to the Westminster Gazette. Recarling that it has been said that the delegates to the conference should eave the old diplomacy behind then in Europe, the former foreign minister asks whether the old diplomacy was the cause of troubles, or whether it was rather the result of troubles. The secret treaties which were often de-clared to be the evil of the old diplomwere not, he maintains, necessar, any part of that system.

"What is needed at Washington," he declares, "is not a change of method, but a change in the point of view. If the latter be there, the old methods will disappear, but not otherwise." Viscount Grey declares his absolute belief that those who summoned the conference were animated by the high aspirations of a patriotism larger than national patriotism, and that the con-ference had an entirely honorable and pure origin. "When they come to close quarter he asks, however, "will the Governmen of the United States and the other gov ments be able to keep on this plane? It is 'the most difficult of tasks to keep heights which the soul is competent to gain.' They must do their part. All we can do is help create the favorable atmosphere to make them feel the encouraging expectation, the readiness to follow and rise if they show us the heights."

NATHANIEL MILLS,

Shakespeare —Investor

Of Shakespeare, Sidney Lee said that when he wrote "The world is still deceived with ornament which obscures the show of evil,' he was expressing downright hatred-not suspicion-of sham, quackery, or cant."

"With his illimitable command of expression, universality of knowledge and his insight and intuitive power of seeing things as they are," Shakespeare's observations, philosophy and views on practically every line of human activity have a value which grows and increases as the years roll

That Shakespeare would have given to the world valuable leads on the subject of investments might be expected.

Shakespeare himself was a shrewd investor and built up a fortune which yielded him the equivalent in present day money of about $20,000 a year, when he returned to Stratford after 26 years writing and acting in London.

We have collected some of his quotations in a series of illustrated advertisements which
