

THIRD YEAR. TRAIN ROBBERS AT WORK

THE FERRY AT WINDSOR THE SCENE OF OPERATIONS.

A Passenger Robbed in the Cars—Detroit Sheriffs Suspended in the Past—A Charge of Confidence Men on the Alert.

Windsor, Oct. 27.—A most daring train robbery occurred here last evening, resulting in the death of the notorious Jesse James' gang in the far west. The express train from the west, which arrived at 9.30, was being shunted to the boat when a gang boarded the foremost first class coach, where they encountered Customs Officer O. Curtis, who was engaged in inspecting baggage. They tried to pass him, but he attempted to keep them back, when they grasped his coat by the lapels and jerked him around and one of them pinned him in front. Mr. Curtis ordered the thieves to let him go, which they did after seeing his badge of office. Curtis then kept them at bay, but they would not let him go. Finally he permitted them to pass by. After passing along a few feet they had an old gentleman from Whites Oaks, Mich., named John J. McLaughlin, who was carrying a trunk containing $1,000 in money, the check of which had been made in Detroit. The property was passed over to a man named James, who hung on to the one nearest him, and was thrown by the thief in his effort to get away. The man who was in the coach during the robbery was identified as the man who was in the coach during the robbery. The man who was in the coach during the robbery was identified as the man who was in the coach during the robbery.

He directed the committee to make an inquiry into the matter.

CATHOLIC AGGRESSION AGAIN.

(By The Editor of The World.)

Six: Here is a gem, in its way, extracted from a sermon published in the Boston Telegraph of a recent date as delivered by the Rev. Mr. Boloney. "Any education of the children of the Catholic church (for we have nothing to do with what is called the education of the people) is procured entirely from the church, that is from her bishops and priests, instilled and directed solely by them, can never be accepted by the members of the Catholic church, either for themselves or their children. When our blessed Lord and child shepherd said to St. Peter, 'Feed my lambs, feed my sheep?' He settled the question for ever, so far as Catholics are concerned, as to who should be their teachers. In this blessed charge to St. Peter they will hear their invisible Lord from His seat in heaven saying to them, 'Your children are my lambs—your parents and mothers—your priests and bishops are all mine, purchased by my blood. You are not the property of kings or queens, or governments, or nobles—you are not even your own. You are bought with a price which cannot be sold and which no man can buy. You are mine, the pastures in which you graze are mine, the food which you eat, the food which you eat, must all be assigned you by me. They who represent me on earth must do this. They alone have my authority to do this and to do it. It is so a superior natural truth that no one out of the church, outside of the office of the priesthood, must ever put his hands upon the food of you and persons without my give you money, if money is wanting, to aid you in building a school house, printing books, paying teachers and such like, as all great and good prices and proprietors of the soil in former ages were wont to do for their vassals, so the church of Christ should do for its members. These my assist you internally. The bishop belongs to them—the bishops and pastors of the flock.
