

writers of history and geography. As geography is one of the eyes of history falling under the category of space, he who would read understandingly must have this eye opened, and here is the book to do it. Unfortunately the other eye of chronology, in the category of time, so far as Egypt's more ancient history is concerned, is as stony as that of the sphinx, and there is no hope of giving it light until some method is found for bringing it into relation with the scheme of Old Testament chronology. This the Talker has been working at for some time and he has hopes that before long, by the aid of many monuments Sinaitic, from Tell El Amarna, and elsewhere, a harmony of the Ancient History of the East may be reached. There are other books calling for consideration but, as Talks about Books have to go on for six months, it is well not to exhaust the supply at the start.

John Campbell

