CURRENT TRADE CONDITIONS.

ONTARIO.

Lumber manufacturers and dealers are satisfied with the trade of the month of June. While it has been, perhaps, slightly less in volume than that of the corresponding month last year, conditions existed this season which restricted the consumption of building lumber. Nevertheless, unsold stocks are smaller than usual at this season of the year, and the outlook is for a steady demand at firm prices. In pine lumber the demand is running to the lower grades, but this must be taken as a favorable factor, for the disposal of the comparatively small percentage of uppers which is now produced causes manufacturers no anxiety. If prices are to advance in relation to the demand, higher prices for box lumber may be predicted, for the call for this grade is unusually heavy. By many persons it is believed that hemlock lumber will make new prices in the near future. It is going into consumption so rapidly as to warrant a readjustment of prices on a higher basis. For stock two inches and thicker there is a very active demand.

The supply of hardwood lumber is still short. Dealers have been large buyers of elm and have picked up basswood where it could be found. Maple is also selling more freely.

Those who are looking for arguments on which to base predictions of lower prices for lumber have no abundance of strong points. The different markets supplied by the Canadian product are in a healthy condition, with little probability of a curtailment of buying power for some time to come. Should an abundant crop of grain be harvested in Canada and the United States, it will probably be reflected in a strong lumber market.

QUEBEC AND NEW BRUNSWICK.

The manufacturers of spruce lumber are in a very comfortable position in respect to the disposal of their output. The danger of a large percentage of the log production being hung up has been lessened only slightly by the recent rains. There promises to be a shortage in the spruce supply. It is claimed that the demand is larger than ever known at this season of the year, and that manufacturers are receiving new orders daily. Many of these they are compelled to refuse on account of having their stock sold largely in advance. There has been heavy buying in Nova Scotia for the South American market, the prices for spruce ranging from $14 to $18. Deals are selling at $14 at the mill. The West India trade is also taking a considerable quantity of stock.

The price of New Brunswick cedar shingles still holds around $3.40 to $3.50 for extras, on Boston rate of freight. A few manufacturers are said to be selling even as low as $3.35, but this cannot be said to be the market price, while indications point to an advance in the near future.

UNITED STATES.

Lumber values in the Eastern States are uncertain, the building strike at New York having affected outside points. Although rumours of a settlement of this strike have been circulated, up to the time of going to press such a result has not been accomplished. When this end is reached, however, there will doubtless be heavy buying of lumber. The general demand throughout the United States is fair. Some dealers report a falling off in the call for building lumber. All manufacturers are holding prices up to the notch, being convinced, apparently, that the entire production will find a market. Reports from Buffalo, Tonawanda and Philadelphia tell of a remarkable demand for low grade white pine. Although the new cut is arriving the supply of the lower grades does not seem to increase, while it is predicted that consumption will expand from this time on. The buying of the higher grades is confined largely to actual needs. In the Chicago market piece stuff sells readily at $16.50 to $17 for strictly short. Hemlock in cargo lots is said to be slightly weaker.

Dry hardwood lumber is in better supply, but prices are still strong. Michigan oak and ash are held at $30 and $22 respectively. Basswood brings $22 and birch $20. Log run elm lumber is worth $18 at the mill. The scarcity of maple continues, manufacturers having to turn down orders.

The shingle market is still unsettled and prices as uncertain as ever. The depression in red cedar shingles has affected the entire list. The Logging Men's Association of the Pacific Coast have decided to close their camps from June 30th to August 31st on account of the accumulation of shingles, especially of the Washington mills.
