results of their experiments. All of this work has been based upon earlier investigations carried out in other countries, more particularly the work of Viesner of the University of Edinburgh, and which until the present time had not been brought to a successful conclusion.

2

The field of usefulness for this drug can hardly be estimated, both in regard to the extent of its benefit well and its beneficial effects.

One should add that, while in the few cases concerned, these results are remarkable, the investigators are reticent about declaring as yet the full value of their tests.

Twolfth February, 1930.