Strange that the wind should be so free And as it lists, be fierce or still; Above and around to breathe of life, Or to mingle the earth and sky in strife; Faintly to whisper with morning's light. Yet to grow! like a fettered fiend at night; Or to love and cherish, and bless, to day, What to-morrow it ruthlessly rends away! what to-morrow it ruthlessly rends away!
Strange that the sun should call into birth
All the fair flowers and fruits of the earth,
Then bid them perish and see them die,
While they cheer the soul and gladden the ey.
At morn its child is the pride of Spring,
At night a shrivfiled and loashsome thing,
To-day there is hope and life in its breath,
To-morrow, silence and sorrow and death;
