

WOMAN IN CASE OF ALLEGED SUICIDE

Hartley Coyle, Desperately Wounded, Says His Own Hand Sped Bullet—Mrs. Kelly's Presence May Be Required in Court—"He Wanted to Marry Me," She Says—A Neighbor's Story.

Saturday, Aug. 26.

A shot from a high powered rifle; a woman running desperately away from the scene; a Salvation Army convert lying in an alley, his life-blood flowing from a wound just below his heart—these are the facts which threaten to engulf the local police force in one of the most complicated cases they have ever had to deal with.

The man shot, Hartley Coyle, twenty-six, 8 Brimley street, in a statement made at the hospital last night, told the doctors that the wound that it is believed will kill him, was inflicted by his own hand. Circumstances surrounding the affair, however, point to a woman having been mixed in it, and the police will ask her to tell what she knows in court.

"He wanted to marry me," said this woman, Mrs. Thomas Kelly, when she was located by a Telegraph reporter at her husband's home in Sherbrooke street, last night, "but I wouldn't have him. He tried to commit suicide before. His mother told me."

Another Woman's Story.

About the only information concerning the connection of the woman with the case was secured on Saturday by a Telegraph reporter who was on the ground soon after the shooting.

Last night Mrs. A. Carr, who lives at No. 7 Brimley street, returned home about 8 o'clock. Having some visiting to do, she left the house in charge of a girl and a young man, who lived with her, and instructed them to lock the front door, saying she would return by the back way. A short time before 9 o'clock she returned home, going up the stair towards the back way.

At the end of the alley she saw a man leaning against the kitchen door of the next house. She called out and asked who he was. He replied: "It's only me, Hartley." Thereupon she entered her own house, thinking nothing more of the incident, as she lives next door to Coyle's.

"When I got inside the house," stated Mrs. Carr to the Telegraph last night, "I found that I needed some oil. I got the oil can and went out by the back way again to the store on Haymarket Square. When I was passing through the alleyway on my way out I did not see Hartley."

"I got the oil and started along City Road toward Brimley street. Just as I got to the corner of that street, a woman whom I recognized as Melia Dunham, known as 'Melie' to her friends, Mrs. Kelly, rushed passed me, dragging behind her an eleven-year old girl whom she had, I believe, adopted. I watched her, astonished, as she sped along City Road toward Haymarket Square.

Found the Body.

"Then, with a feeling that something was wrong, I hurried home. The entrance to the alleyway is only a few feet from the alley on Brimley street. When I got there I heard somebody groaning. Groping my way along a little way I felt a man's body lying on the ground and my hand struck something wet."

"Frightened, I hurried inside my house, lighted a lamp and called to the young man in the house to follow me. We went back to the alley and I found the man on the ground to be Hartley Coyle. Blood was staining his shirt at the side. Near his feet lay a small 22 calibre rifle. I did not touch anything inside an exploded cartridge.

"Some of the neighbors collected, and Edward Riley, who owns the four houses in the row, called the ambulance. Sergeant Smith was soon on the scene and he took charge of the rifle."

Regarding the woman Melia Dunham, Mrs. Carr has been reluctant to speak. Finally, however, she said:

"That woman has been living with Hartley and his brother Albert nearly all the summer. Soon after she came to the house, Mrs. Coyle, Hartley's mother, told me that she had heard her son groaning. Groping my way along a little way I felt a man's body lying on the ground and my hand struck something wet."

"Frightened, I hurried inside my house, lighted a lamp and called to the young man in the house to follow me. We went back to the alley and I found the man on the ground to be Hartley Coyle. Blood was staining his shirt at the side. Near his feet lay a small 22 calibre rifle. I did not touch anything inside an exploded cartridge."

Monday, Aug. 26.

Hartley Coyle, aged twenty-six, who it is alleged, shot himself on Friday night as a result of disappointment in a love affair, died in the General Public Hospital yesterday afternoon. He had been in the hospital since Saturday morning, when he was shot through the left lung and lodged in the back. Before his death the young man made the statement that he had committed suicide because his "girl had gone back" on him; but in spite of this admission, the police are suspicious.

Mrs. Carr has been secured from three persons alleged to have been in the house in Brimley street when the shooting occurred.

When Coyle arrived at the hospital on Friday evening, the physicians were hopeful that he would live. X-ray photographs were taken in an effort to locate the bullet, but early Saturday morning he was found to be rapidly dying and he succumbed to the wound below the heart about 2 o'clock. The body was taken to the morgue. Coroner Berryman will probably examine the body today and view the body before it is buried. When asked last night if the police had any intention of making an arrest, Deputy Chief Jenkins answered that there was none.

Coyle's body will probably be taken to his late home in Brimley street, where he was not converted by the Salvation Army, as was at first stated, but merely attended one of the meetings. He had been visited by his father, mother and one brother.

Mayor Took Big Chance.

(Manitoba Free Press.)

Hamilton (Ont.), is celebrating its centennial this week. The whole city is gaily decorated. Mayor Allan has, in addition to Union Jacks, the Stars and Stripes flying from his own residence. It seems almost too much to hope for that Hamilton will be rejected, will come to a close without some brilliant Empire-saver giving a hysterical demonstration that the flag of a feebly neighboring nation has the same effect on him that the traditional red flag has on a bull.

Major John James Gordon.

In the death of Major John James Gordon, which occurred at his residence, Coldbrook, Saturday, following an illness which he contracted at a sanatorium in one of his last few weeks, St. John lost one of its best known and respected citizens.

He was born at West St. John on Oct. 10, 1847, and was the son of Robert and Jane Gordon, who were natives of Ireland. He left the public schools at the age of thirteen and worked in a saw mill for two years, and then for a short time in the mill at the brass founder's trade, working subsequently as journeyman for Hayward & Farmer, and as foreman for Wages & Green, of this city. He was in charge of the brass foundry department of James Harris & Co.'s works. Following this, he operated a saw mill in the lake at that time. He was in St. John where he was engaged in the grocery business for some years.

Later Mr. Gordon was employed in the manufacture of horse shoe nails with James Bender, and also operated a nail factory in Carleton, which was consolidated with Pender & Purdy, horse shoe nail makers, and later taken over by the joint stock company of Pender & Co., Ltd. In the spring of 1898 he severed his connection with Pender & Co., and established the Gordon Nail Works, which he operated for a short time, and started the manufacture of excelsior at Coldbrook, in which business he was at the time of his death. He was also in the employ of the Canadian Pacific Railway, where he worked his way step by step to the rank of major. On May 15, 1885, he was promoted to lieutenant and the following year to captain. He was also a member of the Royal School of Artillery, Quebec. On July 28, 1894, he was made quartermaster and later the paymaster of the regiment, and was permitted to retire on full pay. He was a member of the Orange order when he joined the Orange order when he was eighteen and was a member of the Canadian Club, and also of the St. John branch of St. Andrew's Society, being for several years marshal. He was also a member of the Clan McKenney's Order of St. Andrew.

Besides his wife, Major Gordon leaves two sisters, Mrs. Ezekiel McLeod, of West St. John, and Mrs. Thomas Johnston, of Calgary.

There are some men in this world so modest and contemptible that it is a difficult matter to know how to give them their deserts. Two brothers, Matthews by name, came to Amherst from Cape Breton, and one of them, who was both deaf and dumb and one of them is practically blind. They secured a room in one of our lodging houses and during the night some contemptible miscreant entered their room and robbed them of $10 and a watch. We trust the thief be brought to justice and given a term in Dorchester—Amherst News.

J. D. Seely, of Havlock, has what Andrew Elliott, the agricultural expert, describes as the most promising plot of alfalfa he has ever seen in any part of Canada. The Sussex Record says that Mr. Seely has been experimenting with alfalfa for several years, and the plants are accompanied by his daughters, Harriet and Ethel, who have spent their vacation through three or four winters. Mr. Seely estimates the yield to have been about ten tons an acre, worth more than $20 a ton. The other words he has gathered at the rate of more than $200 an acre in alfalfa, and has also got much better returns from his cattle.

"We will," replied the Old Fellow, and the four delegates paid the boy's fare—Chatham World.

On Monday afternoon about 8:30 fire broke out in two lumber piles at the Richards lower mill, a few miles below the town of Campbellton. The engine went down and rendered good service in extinguishing the fire. Between 75,000 and 100,000 feet of boards were destroyed, including a lot of about $100,000, which is fully covered by insurance. The fire is supposed to have originated from a spark from either the boiler or the mill smoke stack—Campbellton Tribune.
