

Teach-in held on Greece

The Students for a Free Greece at York are sponsoring Greek Freedom Week to draw attention to the oppressive nature of the ruling Greek junta, and to stimulate discussion concerning Canada's possible role in opposing the regime.

This week of special events will begin on Monday, November 16. Among the activities planned are a speech by exiled Greek leader (now York economics professor) Andreas Papandreou and a teach-in which will include presentations by prominent, concerned Canadians.

George Kotsopoulos, a Greek folksinger who has appeared before at York, will entertain again. A group of Gretian dancers will demonstrate their art in addition to some dramatic presentations.

All York students and other interested persons are invited to attend these events. The organizers hope that concern will be shown about the repression in Greece, thereby supporting efforts to censure and eventually remove the junta and re-establish democratic government.

York briefs

Colson resigns as Voodoo editor

Bob Colson, editor of the Vanier college newspaper VANDOO, resigned Monday due to what he called the "frustration of attempting to do something for people who really don't want or need it."

"The students are happy in their apathy, and although that may sound obscene, perhaps it is a valid thing," he said.

"I cannot say that I don't care. It is very easy to love an idea such as the college system, but when it becomes a reality, you have to work at it."

Security begins crackdown

Several reports of thefts from offices have been received by York's security force in the last few weeks.

C.G. Dunn, director of safety and security, has issued a statement requesting "that all doors, filing cabinets, and desk drawers" be locked when people leave campus in the evenings.

"During both the day and evening there is a continuous movement of thousands of faculty, staff and students, and there are always considerable numbers of visitors at the University.

"The net result is that it is virtually impossible to identify those persons having no legitimate business on campus," Dunn said.

He also advised that "purses and articles of value" not be left "lying on desks, or where they are in plain view, in unattended offices."

Government continues interviews

Officers to interview those seeking summer jobs at Ontario place, the government's new showplace and recreation centre at the CNE waterfront, will be returning to York in the near future.

The Department of Trade and Development had expected between 250 and 500 York students to seek interviews last week. They received well over 1,000 requests and were not able to meet the demand.

The province is seeking hosts and hostesses, restaurant workers, boutique assistants and maintenance helpers.

Interested students will be notified where and when future interviews will take place.

Students plan colossal film

A few dedicated York Students are now in the process of searching for a few thousand others to work with them on a colossal, (or any other kind of) film.

If you are interested in any of: acting, camera, directing, editing, walking, talking, drinking, sex, dope, politics, existence, other people, or yourself, come to Winter's Art Gallery at 2 o'clock on Thursday, Nov. 5.

At your disposal are several 8 mm movie cameras, (plus any more you can get), a little experience and know-how that can be passed on, no preconceptions about what you want to do, and $1,000.
