TWO

THE RED ASCENT

BY ESTHER W. NEILL

CHAPTER VIII-CONTINUED "Perhaps—because—maybe," she id provokingly. "Don't you like aid provokingly.

Take off your mask."

"Never." There was a sound of tearing gauze, and she had fled from him, gauze, and she had fied from him, leaving a portion of her train impaled on the point of his sword. He watched her passing through the moon-light waving her arms. "I'm Fire—Fire—Fire," she intoned. He saw her cutting her way through the crowd that had again poured out upon the porch. Red Riding Hood gave a little ked kiding Hood gave a little scream of mock terror: Boy Blue huddled in a corner and begged her to go away; Queen Elizabeth caught her in her arms, and cried, "Fire and bloodshed! You are part of my reign. Yours is the most heautiful costume in the little most beautiful costume in the room." Then Oliver Cromwell came forward and claimed her for a dance.

with Richard stood in front of the low window, still watching her as she danced lightly in the arms of the smiling Roundhead. He had to confess that she had piqued his curiosity, roused his interest. For the first time in his life he was experiencing that world-old charm slowl that lies in the subtlety of womanhood. He had heard some one say that there would be a general unmasking after the next dance. and, as he waited, he was surprised ties and, as he watcd, he was during the at his own curiosity. But before the next dance began, Fire had disappeared, Cromwell had sought into his eyes. another partner, and when the masks were taken off amid shouts of laughter and surprise, Fire was nowhere to be seen. Miss Fielding, dressed like several others in the despised. room in the trailing gown of a us go and hunt for some ice cream Greek goddess, greeted her guests. little lady with bobbing curls and spectacles followed her around, adding her welcome to that of the young hostess.

Richard, remembering the conversation by the swimming-pool, recognized Miss Prunesy Prisms at volubly. once, but the whole scene had suddenly lost interest for him. He did not want to acknowledge his disappointment even to himself. He had wanted to identify Fire, she had eluded him. Now that the young people had unmasked, he felt himself to be more then that absurd ruff ? Wasn't an alien. In such a throng his hostess would not miss him ; he would steal away somewhere into the garden, and lie down on one of Wasn't the supper elaborate? caterer brought the things on the many benches and watch the special car. What was the salad made of? Did the punch have champagne in it? Which costume Then, when it was time for stars. leave-taking, he would call for was the most mystifying ?" Betty, and they would go home. As he moved from the shadow of the window shutter, he did not see that little Miss White was standing in the doorway, looking for scattered guests that she might Jim Peyton, and Tom Bird.' invite them in to supper. As the moonlight fell upon his face, the old lady's eyes were riveted upon him in a stare that seemed almost twelve years. sightless, then, with a half-hushed scream, she fell fainting to the floor. to make a living, I guess. He was beside her in a moment. Most of the merry-makers had passed through the hallway into homes in the summer. Then the county wakes up. I suppose we shall be very gay for a month or the hospitable dining-room in the vestern wing of the house, but as Richard stooped over the frail little lady he heard Miss Fielding say with a calm that proved she was undismayed by the emergency: "Can you lift her? Will you 'Can you lift her?

"Dear me! How romantic! What made her?" 'But he was not killed." Then how can you I believe I frightened her." ghost Why, Dick He died. He died many years " Oh, it was the old, worn story a soldier lover or something, is seems very old for that sort of afterwards. Prunesy ! Prunesy ! st was quite alive. I'll Your ghost was quite alive. I'll show him to you some day. Here, take another sip of brandy—you're better now. All these years you've been longing to see a ghost, and when you come across a real sub-when you come across a real sub-stantial one, you haven't strength to question him. Come. I'm going to send Martha to undress you and put you to bed. You will be all right in the morning. Sure you feel better now? Then I'll go downstairs, back to my guests." You do look like his picture, said Betty with conviction, " and I suppose the uniform was startling. I wonder if anybody ever lives single nowadays because he or she can't get the one desired." Richard had retreated as soon as Richard laughed. "Whom does one marry then, Betty, dear? Some-body one doesn't want?" he realized that he was the direct cause of the old lady's fright; he stood in the hall outside the bedy one doesn't want : Somebody that asks her," Somebody that asks her," I don't stood in the hall outside the bed-room door waiting to see if he could answered Betty solemily. "I don't think, it's quite fair that girls are not given the choosing." be of any further service. As soon as Miss Fielding had summoned a neat negro maid from one of the thought they were," he said, nearby dressing-rooms, she joined him upon the stairs.

without much interest. "Some people have so few opportunities," she went on reflect-ively; "of course there are girls like Jess Fielding who can travel "I believe Prunesy was in love your grandfather," she said. 'I think Lremember her hinting at everywhere, meet all sorts of men, entertain lavishly, and dress like it one day; and you have borrowed his clothes, I know, for you look so princesses. I'm sure they can pick and choose. That dress she had on different from when I saw you last. Or, perhaps, we are all dreaming dreams tonight." tonight must have cost five or six dollars a yard. It was a sort of "I believe we are," he admitted golden gauze. I never saw anything like it.

'I thought she had on white." 'Why, Dick, she was dressed as "What! You ?" "The whole thing has seemed very unreal," he said. Fire. Don't tell me that you are such a stupid as not to guess that Fire. And you care only for realibefore? You certainly will never make a ladies' man." The old look of weariness came

'I guess not," he said after a She leaned slightly on his arm as hey descended the wide steps to-nonsense ; but I believe she has made a study of spiritualism until she half believes she can see ghosts. And in this case it wasn't so absurd because she took me for my grand-

Some realities are not to be Food for instance. Let her conversation tonight seemed part of that other interview he had had with her at the swimming-pool. had with her at the swinning every He found himself rehearsing every had made. What had

CHAPTER IX RICHARD MAKES A DECISION

At last she paused for a response

I'm tired of realities.

together

she meant by saying that he would not forget her? Was it true? Did On the way home Richard was ery silent. But Betty chattered not forget her ? silent. But Betty chight in bly. "Didn't the knight in forming pan? How she really mean that he had always armor look like a frying pan ?

held a place in her memory, or had she talked only to tease and could he dance in all those clatter-ing clothes? Wasn't Boy Blue a dear? Would you believe that Bob Fairfax could look beautiful? Where did Queen Elizabeth buy bewilder him? As they drove along in silence under the steely glitter of the stars, fragments of his grandfather's love letters came back to him, and he began to understand vaguely that the it was possible for a woman to command a man's whole mind until house gorgeous? Didn't the grounds look like fairyland? Wasn't Jess Fielding an ideal hostess she actually absorbed him.

remark she had made.

But when they reached home he put all thought of her aside. The whole evening had seemed unreal-What was the salad a page from his half-forgotten fairy books that had charmed his imagination, but which had no part in a utilitarian world where resist less forces chain down the spirit of

'Since I did not know the people, they all seemed mystifying to me." "You knew Bob Fairfax, and dreamer. Betty jumped out of the buggy, and ran into the house, while continued on his way to the stable; I hadn't seen any of them for old Pedro had to be unhitched and watered, and by the time Richard "Didn't you see any of them entered his own bedroom it was after two o'clock. He threw himwhen you were here two years self upon the bed to rest for a ago ?" "No, they were all away-trying self upon the bed to rest for a moment, and he slept soundly until morning, dressed in his full uniform. The prophecy of Fire had partly failed. He had been too tired to "They come and visit their old remember. The days began again monoton-

The days began again monoton-ously. The garden beds must be weeded and sprayed; all kinds of living things seemed to spring up to devour the fresh green leaves of the vegetables. He sent to the nearest manufacturing town and bought a parties, but I don't suppose they will be as beautiful as this one. every man there was a picture,

AN IDYL IN FRANCE

architect to work out for me. Those are the blue prints. I want to know what you think of them." She knelt there alone, Rosary in hand, in the gloom of the shell-pierced church. Through those He opened them with eagerness. He was forgetful now of his own personal appearance. "I am so very doors she had brought him, personal appearance. "I am so glad to hear it," he said enthusiasher little babe, in her arms. His great blue eyes had rounded, when she knelt with him before the shrine. His little face lit up at the tically. "I see you have planned for detached houses—that's fine; they can all have flower gardens. wonder of it all. His baby voice had hushed, and he had kept very still; it had seemed as though he knew that he was in the house of This kitchen seems very practical; stationary tubs and running water will save lots of labor. B like the roof, it's too flat. But I don't

"Why, what's the matter with a flat roof ?

THE CATHOLIC RECORD

'Makes the house too hot in summer, unless it has some sort of an air chamber above."

"Then put a peak on it." He took the handle of his hoe and began drawing a plan in the dust of the roadway. "That would be my idea; I don't believe it would add greatly to the expense."

"I don't care if it does," she "I don't care if it does," she said. "Give me the blue prints and I'll go. This sun is terrible. I must get home, You had better stop work for the day." "I can't do that," he said hope-lessly. vears

After she had gone he wondered why he had not tried to keep her. yet unsteadily, went forth to seek what adventures might lie in wait Why had he not, at least, offered her the hospitality of the house? for him in the unexplored nooks and corners of the little garden. Betty would have been glad to see her, and the big darkened parlor promised cool and comfort after the glare of the sun on the roads. He have been but a little child! might have joined her there at luncheon time. Perhaps she would have played for him on the old piano that had belonged to his his mother—perhaps she could sing. It had been so long since he had heard any good music, and he had long pause. Betty was right. He had been "stupid." What other girl except Jess Fielding would have talked to him in that amazing way? She had tried to disguise her voice, but her conversation tonicht seemed a would come running home to her, and they would greet each other as though they had been parted for a week. He would tell her the story of his day, and she would listen and marvel at his simple little tale. How good God had been. Through those arched doors they used to come to pay homage to their Lord, often in the afternoon, and sometimes in the falling dusk The day grew warmer. The sun shone, a red-eyed monster, threatening to wither and burn the farreaching acres of corn where lay Richard's only hope of a harvest. The ground was gray and cracked, thirsting for moisture, and when ever a breeze ventured across the tips of the cornstalks it brought no and sometimes in the falling dusk refreshment, only a hot fog of whirling dust. Richard prayed for rain. The heat had become intense, of evening. On Sunday mornings he would take her by the hand and together they would join the solemn little procession of the good countryand he had been at work ever since sunrise; toward noon he turned turned folk on their way to Holy Mass. suddenly sick and giddy, and fell face downwards in the cornfield, cutting himself upon the barbed wire with which he had been repair-And then, perhaps, the good Cure would meet them, and would stop and lay his hand on the little golden head, and tell her what a man her ing the fence.

son was going to be. How proud of Then the rain came; great sheets of water that brought renewed life to all growing things, rousing Richard from his semi-conscious state. He crept back to the house, The back to the house, him she was, her little Joseph! How she thanked God for the commany happy moments. At this altar railing, now bruised and broken by the desecrating hand of hardly knowing how he accom-plished the journey. Betty and the hardly olonel were sitting on the porch. war, had come to her and to him

"I believe I have had a slight sunstroke," he said, holding to the porch-railing for support. "I think I shall have to go to bed." war, had come to her and to him the greatest joy of all. Here God had come and dwelt with them. The day of First Communion—the happiest and most memorable day in the life of the Former Could day Betty helped him up the stairs with some show of sisterly sym-pathy, then ran to the well for in the life of the French Catholic; she remembered it as though were only yesterday - the boys and girls receiving for the first water, and wetting cloths, bound them around his head.

"We really ought to have ice," she said as she busied herself with the bandages.

'Perhaps we-will-next-year,' he murmured drowsily.

he murmured drowsily. There was always something lack-ing—some necessity. Would he ever be able to provide the simple comforts of life? Betty stayed beside him for an hour. Then the sun came out. "You won't mind if I leave you now ?" she asked. "I promised Deb Feierer would go riding with the strange Latin words the responses economical, as well as the most efficacious, for his needs. He was trying some experiments in inten-sive farming, and he was becoming interested in spite of the labor it One morning to refer to the wind the stables." She went to the window of the labor it if t over the strange Latin words and she learned the responses for the Mass with him. She began growing to need her less and less. and opened the blinds. "There he is now. Oh, Dicky, you won't care if I go?" "One bright Sunday, in the spring-time of the year, she sat in her time-stained pew, here in the church, and watched her little son, had confirmed him, and she kissed him as was her wont. "My son, what is it ?"

"Mamma" (rather shyly,) want to be a priest."

Want to be a priest. Her heart leaped. Her son a priest? Her little Joseph? Her little child? Was it possible. She kissed him again, and after a few His moments of silence they went to the feet of our Lord, here in this holy And here she poured forth place. And here she poured forth her Magnificat of praise and thanksgiving and gladness to the God who had so blessed her. It seemed that he must have been spared from death for this. She made him her God. This holy place, filled with happy memories, brought back to her mind dim pictures of the past; the offering to God. How often they had come to this little church. In joy and in sorrow it had been a place of comfort and cherubic smile of her little one; his prattle throughout the long, happy days; his lisping prayers at her knee when night had come, peasant prayers they were, handed down from generation to generation, and taught to countless children before the great once firenlaces of the solace. What memories these broken walls enclosed—holy memories, her last bond of union to happier days! Perhaps she had been too happy the great open fireplaces of the poor; trustful prayers, sanctified and consecrated by the faith and with him, too proud of him ; but was her only treasure. And the saintly cure told her that she might the hope and the love of a thousand well be proud of him, and that it was no sin for her. And he assured All too soon had passed the years of helplessness. All too soon came the day when he left the protection her, too, that Joseph had a true vocation—that her son would some day, God willing, be a priest of of her loving arms, and manfully, Jesus Christ.

To be the mother of a priest Like the Virgin Mother of th High she asked in her heart how this thing could be done; and she Yet, his footsteps grew sure all too soon. Oh, that he could always this thing could be done, and she seemed to be answered, as was Mary, that through the power of the Holy Ghost all things might be done. Yet her mother's heart was Those were joyous years, of mutual love and adoration. He filled her lonely life. She saw in sad, too! for she realized that durhim a gift, as it were, from God, her greatest blessing, her one ing those long years of study which lay ahead he could not be with her. It would be hard, yet she would no her greatest blessing, her one mission in life. As she grew older, hours of separation had to come. He went to school with the other children of the town; but, then, his absence made her delight more bis company. He utter a word of regret. And he felt as she. To leave his home, his little mother, and all the familiar scenes of childhood — it must have been hard for him. On and more in his company. He would come running home to her, the day when he was to leave for the Petite Seminarie at Issy, when all the preparations had been made he came to sit with her for the last time. They were content to remain in the garden together, silent, happy in each other's company.

he began. Mamma,' "Yes, my Joseph." "Do you think that Our Lord grieved to leave His home at Nazareth ' Yes, my son, it did grieve Him and yet He left all behind, to take up His mission and to prepare for the Cross And I, Mamma-I must be like Him

"Yes, Joseph; for you are to be another Christ; and, like Him, you must leave your mother and al else behind, and go do God's will.' Those days which followed were lonely for her. The light seemed to

His have gone from her life. His letters, of course, cheered her, as These broken walls had witnessed did the realization that he was preparing for God's work. Then, holidays came, and they were happy weeks indeed. In time he went from Issy to the great Seminary of Saint Sulpice, Paris. Ever after he was clothed in the habit of the clergy. He was tall now, and very dark, with such delicate chiselling of features. She little was proud of him-so proud-too time the Sacred Host from the proud, perhaps. Came the great day of ordination, hands of the priest, and among them her Joseph. He had confided in the brightness of July, and after-ward his first high Mass in this very to her that he wished always to to her that he wished always to serve his Eucharistic King; and she had smiled at his ardor, and her heart was glad. She knew now that Joseph loved Him more than her, across the land, and the summons came for him to report at once for service in the Army of the Republic. The sword had begun to er heart.

MURPHY & GUNN BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, NOTARIES Solicitors for The Home Bank of Canada Episcopal Corporation Suite 53, Bank of Toronto Chambers LONDON, CANADA Phone 170 FOY, KNOX & MONAHAN BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, NOTARIES, 270 ton T. Louis Monahe George Keogh Cable Address : "Foy" Telephones | Main 461 Main 462 Offices: Continental Life Building CORNER BAY AND RICHMOND STREETS TORONTO DAY, FERGUSON & CO. BARRISTERS mes E. Day n.M. Ferguson seph P. Walsh TORONTO, CANAP

LUNNEY & LANNAN

Harry W. Lunney, B. A., B. C. L Alphonsus Lannan, LL. B. CALGARY, ALBERTA

JOHN H. MCELDERRY

CONVEYANCER

GUELPH, ONT.

ARCHITECTS

Members Ontario Association ARCHITECTS Sixth Floor, Bank of Toronto Chamber

DENTISTS

DR. BRUCE E. EAID Room 5, Dominion Bank Chambers Cor. Richmond and Dundas Sts. Phone 5660

A Business College of Strength and Character

St. Jerome's College Founded 1864 KITCHENER, ONT

Excellent Business College Department. Excellent High School or Academic Department. Excellent College and Philosophica nent. Excellent College and Philosophical Department. Address: REV. W. A. BENINGER, C. R., President

87 YONGE ST., TORONTO

Phone Main 4030

Hennessey

Order by Phone - we Deliver

Something More Than a Drug S

Painting and

Phone 397

CUT FLOWERS

CANDIES

389 Burwell St.

DRUGS

PERFUMES

NOVEMBER 19, 921

Casavant Freres CHURCH LIMITEE

Organ Builders ST. HYACINTHE QUEBEC

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, NOTARIES

BARRISTER. SOLICITOR NOTARY PUBLIC to Loan Telephone 1081 HERALD BLDG. ROOM 24 Money to Loan

WATT & BLACKWELL

LONDON, ONT.

flesh that she might have acquired in her late years of luxurious living. Richard lifted her in his arms with that rare reverence that youth sometimes offers old age, and carrying her easily up the broad stairs, he placed her in her high four-poster. "Now go ask the butler for the brandy and bring it here yourself," commanded Miss Fielding, loosen-ing the old lady's dress. "Don't tell any one. We don't want to cast a pall over the party. Prunesy before " has fainted once or twice before. Richard retraced his steps, a and finding the grizzly-headed butler gathering chairs from the hall, he ordered him to bring the decanter at once. The butler was too well-trained to exhibit either surprise or hesitation. He had been brought up in a region where a "gentle-man's thirst" was to be regarded, not deplored.

Richard carried the heavy decanter back to the bedroom, and helped Miss Fielding force some of the liquor between her old friend's pale Miss Prunesy gasped and opened her faded eyes. "Jessica, Jessica, dear," she said feebly, clinging to the girl's strong hand, "I-I saw a ghost upon the porch.

Nonsense," said the girl, kneeling beside the bed and gathering are dreaming." "I saw him distinctly," said the old lady, trembling now, "I saw him in the moonlight." "Who?" asked the girl, stooping to kiss the wrinkled cheek. "He—he was once a soldier." trunesy, you talked about ourselves." "All men enjoy that," said Betty sageły. "I begin to have hopes of you, Dicky; Jess Fielding seemed to go out of her way to please you. There were two or three men there who were insanely "Dim, and he took it gingerly in his dusty hands. "Christmas?" he repeated. "It's nearer Fourth of July." "Please don't be so exact," she entreated. "Dim, and he took it gingerly in his dusty hands. "Christmas?" he repeated. "It's nearer Fourth of ulty."

to kiss the wrinkled cheek. "He—he was once a soldier," Jessica looked up at Bichard as if she had suddenly remembered his presence. "Of course he was," she said soothingly. "I've always suspected, Prunesy, that your lover was killed in the war."

The old lady's frame was as spare as a sparrow's; her nerves and her energy had burned up any surplus deat the distance of the sparrow's in th

I only talked to one." And who was she I don't know. "Couldn't you guess ? Didn't you see her when she unmasked ?'

She wasn't there.' "Why, Dick, she must have been there. No girl would have missed the fun of unmasking; no girl would leave before the refreshments were served. She did.' What did she have on ? She was dressed as Fire.'

Betty laughed softly. "Don't you know who that was? No She changed her dress."

"What for ?" "To fool you, I guess. Her costume was so extraordinary I should think she would have liked to keep it on." "Who was she ?"

"Men are stupid," said Betty. "I've always believed you were wonderfully clever, but I'll have to change my mind. Did you have a good time

I don't know whether I did or not

But it wasn't quite the bore can truthfully admit that." "Did you find Fire interesting ?"

was surprising. "What did you talk about ?" He hesitated. "I believe

*

One morning when he was hard seemed unbearably warmer, the light from the unshuttered window at work in one of the outlaying fields he saw Miss Fielding come riding on horseback down the unfrequented road. He pulled his battered straw shone directly in his eyes, and he felt too weak to walk that far to close the blinds. Flies buzzed about him in their maddening monotone, hat over his eyes, hoping that she would pass him by, for his clothes were mud-daubed and his shoes and alighted on his face, his hands, were mud-databed and his shoes showed a long rent in the side; but she stopped at the fence and called: "May I come in for a moment?" He answered her with what cordiality he could, and started toward her to open the gate what was smothering. The bandages started grew hot upon his head, he took gate. urged in the bucket that stood on a chair toward her to open the gate. Before he reached it she had urged her horse to the high jump, and Richard trembled for her safety even while he admired her skillful horsemanship as he saw her clear the five bars of the sagging gate.

"I don't always land in mud puddles. Warm weather for that puddles. puddles. Warm weather for that sort of thing. I know you are busy, but I want you to look at these plans for a moment, and tell me what you think of them. I call them my Christmas tree village." She held out a roll of papers to him and he took it gingarky in his me gratitude or service in return ?

church, and watched her little son, her little Joseph, enter the sanctu-ary with the silver-haired priest, to serve Mass for the first time. It seemed impossible. How her heart fluttered. Perhaps he would for-get! But no! With the solemn gravity of boyhood he performed his simple duties without mistake. She watched him, hopeful, and yet until in sheer desperation he cov-ered himself entirely with the long linen sheet. Then he felt that he She watched him, hopeful, and yet half fearful of what the coming years might bring. All was so bright then— Then came the sickness. He was Then came the sickness. He was very near death. His face was flushed and wasted with the fever. The doctor came, shook his head sadly, and turned away from the bedside; he told her that God alone bedside; he tore her Then by the bed, but, after an hour or two, even the well water lost its cool two, even the well water lost its cool freshness, the mere wetness alone was little comfort. The drippings from the bandages soaked his pillow and attracted more flies. bedside; he told her that God alone could save Joseph for her. Then the venerable Cure had come, bring-ing with him the Bread of Life and the sacred oils. Oh, how she had watched and suffered and prayed! If God would only spare him to her ! He had screened the other windows of the house and neglected his own. Why had Betty left those shutters open ? Must he go on forever exerther A change came one day. The ing every energy, and asking for no doctor said it was a miracle. From doctor said it was a miracle. From that time on he grew steadily better. He was given back to her, as it were, as one from the dead. Many weeks passed before the ruddy glow of health returned to his cheeks. How good it was to have "C-o-w-cow, p-l-o-w-plow," he began to spell words mechanically. 'he began to spell words meenanically. His mind refused to worry itself further about his bodily neglect. "C-o-w," the word brought no image, "p-l-o-w," the letters were cheeks. How good it was to have him well again ! repeated over and over again ; the repeated over and over again; the only thing troubling him now was the arranging of those few letters: "c-lo-w-no, that was not right, p-o-w-." Where had he begun; where ended? Over and over again But now, it seemed, he was no longer the merry, care-free littlefel-low of old. He went about his play as usual, it is true, and he continued to do a thousand little things to lighten her duties; but in some way he seemed to be less and less the words reiterated themselves. Every now and then the vague fear the child, and more and more the the child, and more and more the man. She never would forget—he was thirteen then—he came to her one evening shortly after the Bishop

He made a hurried visit to her, on a dark autumn day. He kissed her, and assured her that everything would yet be well. Then he was of to change the black of his clerica habit for the blue tunic of the sol-diers of France-forced to harden consecrated hands with his newly spade and rifle.

From that time on she tried to be reconciled to the will of God. She tried to be like the Blessed Mother, whose heart was torn with grief when she was left behind and her Son went on to death. The were long-oh, so long ! And the nights were longer. She always felt the premonition of impending

After months of waiting her priest-soldier son came home to her for a few days of well-earned rest. He was tired and worn, but unhurt He was three and work, but unlike as yet, and immensely happy. He said little of the hardships of his new life—the tiresome drill, the weary marches, and the actual horror of the firing line. He told horror of the firing line. He told her instead of the great, unworked field in which he was privileged to toil for the salvation of souls. He told her of the confidence his fellow-soldiers had in him, and of how his commander permitted him to hear confessions and to say Mass when opportunity allowed. He when opportunity allowed. told her of the consolation he He able to give to the dying, and of the souls that through God's grace he had been able to help.

They parted once more.

They parted once more. She never saw him again. They told her of his death. He was with his company in the trenches, when it was reported that some soldiers were mortally wounded in a nearby shell-hole which was constantly swept by the enemy fire. Her Joseph immediately sought per-mission to go to them — and he was killed at their side. That was all. killed at their side. That was all.

SPECIALLY PRODUCED FOR THE USE OF

RELIGIOUS COMMUNITIES BLACK, WHITE, AND COLOURED

SERGES and CLOTHS, VEILINGS. CASHMERES, ETC.

Stocked in a large variety of widths and qua ples forwarded on applicat

LOUIS SANDY MIIIS. STAFFORD, ENGLAND andi, Stafford. 'Phone No. 104 came that he was losing his mind; then the fetters returned again to plague him, and he would begin to spell anew, "c-l-o-w, p-o-w-."