Russian Poland is still the centre of interest in the war situation so far as military operations are concerned. Reports from the rival headquarters indicate that on either side the balance, although on the face of the known facts the conviction is growing here that the German General Mackensen has done at Lodz what Bazaine failed to do at Metz, he has saved his army after it was encircled by the enemy.

But it is equally clear that the German tactical plan for the taking of Warsaw again has failed, according to the prevailing opinion in England.

Whether a counter invasion of Silesia has been rendered impossible for the present remains to be seen.

Little activity along the Austrian front is reported. An exception is the assertion from Vienna of an Austrian victory with the capture of quantities of prisoners and munitions of war along the southern line, but there is nothing to indicate that Russia has given way in her evident intention of invading the rich German provinces by way of Cracow. Later official reports from Vienna declared that calm prevailed on the Cracow frontier but that fighting continued in the Carpathians.

Serbian eyes are turning hopefully in the direction of these mountains in the expectation soon of seeing a Russian general order the withdrawal of Budapest. This would relieve the pressure being exerted against Serbia by half a million Austrian troops who have forced the Serbians back into strong defensive positions within their own borders.

Army headquarters in Berlin report a desperate three days battle in Poland, accompanied by a successful effort on the part of the Germans to break through the Russian ring, the German report also states, however, that the Russian army has not been driven into a position of having inflicted severe punishment on the enemy.

According to despatches reaching here from Petrograd, Lowicz and Lodz still are critical points in the fighting in Northern Poland, where the German army has been making bids fair to be the most momentous of the whole war. Petrograd puts especial emphasis on the capture of German burghers on the banks of the Vistula River near Plock, as indicating the cutting of a convenient means of communication with the German armies in Poland.

In the political field to-day's meeting of the German Reichstag is attracting much attention. Many members of the Reichstag, a large number of them in uniform, already have gathered in Berlin in anticipation of this important session which it is expected provide a new war program.

Quiet prevails along the western front, but alarming reports have been received in the form of a report of a serious epidemic of typhoid fever in Germany.
