bodestroy the nutriment in obtaining strong spirit.

I have learned that the wines of Scripture times were very different to the alcoholic liquors of to day; distillation was unknown, and there was not the craving for drink then, nor the necessity for total abstinence.

I have learned that it is only humane that men should abstain for the sake of trying to make this land—so blighted by drink—a little brighter.

Some Thoughts and Findings on Alcohol.

Sir Benjamin W. Richardson, the eminent Haglish physician and surgeon, has left this testimony on record. He says: I am recording a matter of personal history when I say that I dorous, had one so thought of alcoholic except as a tool. I thought it easted the act and lifed up the mind into greater activity. I learned step by step, that the true action of alcoholis to create paralysis of nervoes power.

A young business man of splendid capacities, whose views on the temperance question were those generally held by se-called moderate drinkers, when told by his uncle, a wine and apirit merchant, that the had planued to retire from business, and desired to make arrangements with his nephew that he might carry on this well-paying concern, decided before accepting the offer to examine some temperance literature bearing upon the alcohol gave energy and strength. I thought every robust, healthylocohig moderate drinkers was a proof of the strength giving properties of alcohol.

I thought the missiens traffic in alcoholic diquate the was a proof of the strength giving properties of alcohol.

I thought the was only the drunkard who should become an abstainer, if he could not drink moderately, and that he was to be despiced state the classion is in its power to paralyze. I have learned that, thanks consulting the content of the country.

I have learned that the secret the classion is in its power to paralyze. Propie mistake duiled perceptions and temporarily cased neves for strength, and not on account of, the advantage of abstinence.

I have learned that, thanks to his constitution, he is healthy in spite of proved abstainers, if he could not drink moderately, and the healthier.
