Roderick's Unselfishness.

By RUTH CAMERON.

Mrs. Martin came into the room where Roderick was reading with a match in one hand, the telephone book in the other, and a much-mused pair of Roderick's trousers over her arm. "Roderick, didn't you say yesterday when Rose wouldn't lead you her tennis racket that you thought selfishness was the very worst fault?" she asked. "Yes, I did, and I meant it, too." "Don't you think you're selfish?" Roderick looked up at his mother. "Didn't I just save up my money for weeks to buy Rose that toilet set for her birthday?" His voice showed art and resentment.

Unselfishness Only One Form of Selfishness.

His mother laid her hand on his. "Yes, I know, son; you're not a bit stingy, but selfishness is only one form of selfishness, and it was selfishness that you said was the worst fault."

"This is the match safe from the bedroom. It isn't a bit like the safe or burnt matches, is it? And yet you keep putting the burnt matches in your father's can't see in the dark as well as you and several times he has had to grope his way back into the room because he has tried several matches and found them all burnt."

He told you about this again and again, and you just said you didn't mind, and went on doing it."

Mrs. Martin took up the telephone book. "I had just a few minutes left after I finished my sewing yesterday to take a walk before dark. I had to make two calls on the telephone first."

and I spent the whole of that time looking for the telephone book. It was up in your room, where you left it the night before."

The trousers came last.

He threw his trousers on a chair.

"I pressed those a few days ago," said Roderick's mother, "and look at them! Instead of putting them on a hanger, you throw them over a chair when you came in that wet day and now they need pressing again."

"If you look in the dictionary, Roderick, you'll find that the definition of selfishness is 'preferring your advantage or convenience before another's.' When you make Father and the rest of us all that trouble about burnt matches rather than bother yourself to put them in the right place isn't that preferring your convenience to ours? And when you made no noise my walk because you wouldn't bother to put things back in their places, what was that?"

There was a deep red color in Roderick's face as he bent over his book with a half audible murmur that sounded like, "I don't know."

She found him bending over the ironing board.

But the next day when Roderick's mother came in from a walk, she found him in the kitchen bending over the ironing board.

"Look here, Mother," he asked, with an elaborate affectation of carelessness, "do you press the cuff, or not?"

Too wise to admit that she read any significance into his act, or to offer to help him, Mrs. Martin casually answered that it wasn't good form to press the cuff. But that night she did venture to put her arms around his neck and give him a specially tender hug when Roderick came to kiss her good-night.

And Roderick understood.

Your Boys and Girls.

When baby becomes a year old its diet should begin to include fruit juices and the whites of eggs. Begin with a wine glass of chicken broth or bouillon fed from a spoon, and gradually decrease the amount of bottle food. Soon after it turns its first year the child should learn to drink from a small cup and its meals may be reduced to five a day with an occasional drink of orange juice and plenty of water.

The first and second meals should consist chiefly of modified milk to which half as much strained oatmeal had been added. Early in the afternoon a gill of chicken broth, or half as much beef juice, may be given, and this may be varied every few days with the white of an egg boiled for a minute. The two remaining meals should have milk as their mainstay.

Everyday Etiquette.

"Would it be proper for me to call upon a new family in our neighbourhood first and how long should I wait before doing so?" was Barbara's query. "You should call upon your new neighbours as soon as they have become settled. Such calls are usually made between the hours of three and six in the afternoon," directed her aunt.

AN IDEAL PEACE.

New York World:—I believe that nowhere is this demand for "realization of the principles of nationalities" realized to such a degree as in both states of the (Austro-Hungarian) monarchy—Count Tisza.

The Bohemians, whose Twenty-eighth Regiment, the "Children of Prague," went over in a body to the Russians; the Bosnian Serbs, 800 of whose civilians have been executed for plotting against the Government; the Italians of the Trentino who are fighting for Italy; the Rumanians of Transylvania, deprived of political power, might dispute this estimate. It may be agreed, though, that Austria-Hungary is an ideal place to introduce that principle.

THE CONTRACTOR

The contractor is a busy, bustling mechanic who agrees to build a house by the day and usually winds up by building it by the year.

One of the most discouraging epochs in a man's career is to let a contract for a six-room house with pebble dash trimmings, with the understanding that it is to be completed during the lifetime of the party of the first part. Some people endeavor to hurry up the contractor by attaching a time penalty to the contract, with a forfeiture clause, which compels the contractor to bring in a bill for extras longer than a clothes line. This causes a strong bond of affection to spring up between the contractor and the builder, which bond is seldom severed outside of the district court.

Every contractor has a force of movable carpenters, who are never found in the same spot two days in succession. This usually enables the plasterers to begin their work about the time the fall rains set in. However, the contractor has a good deal to put up with. One of his worst enemies is the tight citizen who expects him to throw in a few extra bay windows and use cassian walnut instead of yellow pine, at the original contract price. There is also the hind-sighted man who decides to move the dining room around on the east side, after the wall is up.

The contractor is always being delayed by the weather or a foreman who has just come down with inebriety or the death of a second cousin of his wife on her mother's side, but in all other respects he is a model citizen and his life is one long-drawn-out dream of peace. Every once in a while we find a contractor who is a real Christian, which teaches us that some men can retain their religion under the most severe trials.
