MINIATURE BATTLE SHIPS AID MILITIA TO DRILL IN WINTER.

Through an ingenious device invested by Commander Kingsley L. Martin, of the Second battalion, Naval Militia of New York, and put into operation a few weeks ago, the members of that command are enabled to receive a general working knowledge of navigation and maneeuvres of battle ships, as well as of battle ship equipment, within the armory. On the floor of the armory of the battalion, in Brooklyn, has been "lannched" a division of four ininiature dreadnoughts, twenty-four feet in length with a beam of five fast six inches. The models are outlwardly complete in every detail and are operated over the floor after the manner of vessels at sea.

The crew of each of these miniature war craft consists of three men, two "engineers" and a navigator. The sensations of operating a vessel at sea are experienced by these men. The orders of the navigator are conveyed to the engineers by way of the engine room telegraph and, with the armory in complete darkness, the miniature division "oteams" over the floor and performs various evolutions, even as greater vessels affoat, by the light of their own searchlights and the regulation side lights.

To all appearances the four vessels on the floor of the armory are battle ships complete in every detail, with decks cleared for action and guns bristling from the fore and aft turrets and port and starboard gun ports. All that is necessary to lend spectacular completeness to the scene are the waves on the armory floor and smoke from the smokestacks.

When at night every light is put out in the armory the place is pinged in darkness, except for the flickering lights from the ministure fighting craft. With the red lights at the masthead signifying that the "engines" are motionless, the yard signals begin to flicker and the red masthead light flickers out and is supplanted by a white light on the various vessels, showing that they are under way. Then follows a series of evolutions, in which the searchlights and finally a blaze of cannon startles the hitherto almost slient armory into even greater surprise.

When the firing begins the whole crew of each vessel is pressed into service, and through the gun tubes blank cartridges are fired with 38-calibre revolvers. As into tropical sunlight, which is suddenly reflected on the polished and placid floor of the armory, the models pass majestically when the lights are switched on.

LONDON MONEY PLENTIFUL

Reports regarding the money market are rather conflicting. Some money is being offered brokers, while at the is being offered brokers, while at the same time loans are being called, the inference being that the improvement in monetary conditions is not of any great extent. Macdonald has not made much response to the dividend declaration. It sold around 59, which gives a dividend return of over 8 1-4 per cent. Activity in Canada Bread bonds continues. ROYAL PARK

Comparisons are odious, but we feel obliged to bring to the notice of the people of Calgary the claims of ROYAL PARK and in no way can this be better done than by comparing it with other Calgary properties. ROYAL PARK affords one of the finest views in Calgary. It is on 14th Street West, which the City Planners intend to make one of Calgary's finest boulevards.

The Baptists are to start soon on a temporary college in Crescent Heights; but the LARGE PERMANENT UNIVERSITY will be built adjoining 14th Street West, and adjoining ROYAL PARK to the northeast, and will take two years to build.

Most of the property adjoining ROYAL PARK is restricted and only beautiful modern houses will be built. WE BELIEVE that the district immediately around ROYAL PARK will eventually be as good as Mount Royal-It is in a better location. Before the lots are paid for all the city utilities should be there. Except in two cases we have sold to everyboly to whom we have shown the property. In most cases we have sold four or six lots to one person.
