fled as the full significance of the increased vote of the Social Democracy is realized. vote of the Social Democracy is realized.

The fact that the Socialists polled 125,000 out of a total of 230,000 votes in Berlin accentuates the importance of their victory, especially when it is considered that the increase in the Capital of 33,000 votes since 1888 is merely a fair example of the augmented strength of the Democracy in other congested parts of the kingdom. The majority of the Cartel party having been completely destroyed, the Government's chance of passing any of the bills it contemplated introducing are so small as to be unworthy of Personal Notes of Mr. Biggar.
