A motion will be made to the chambers for particulars of the plaintiff statement of claim in the case of the Acr Gruesome Legends—The Strange Power of Sally Friddly, Mrs. Roland and Ann Hotel—Mysterious Examples of Witchcraft—Ancient Crones Whose Lives are Spent in Cursings.

Many of the superstitions of the old colonial times still survive in the mountains said that the defendants carried the largest statement of claim in the case of the Acme Silver Company against the Stacey Hardware and Manufacturing Company. In December last the defendants published in The St. Thomas Daily Times a Christmas advertisement addressed to the public generally and occupying half a sheet of said paper, in which it is alleged they falsely and maliciously libeled the plaintiffs. The advertisement said that the defendants carried the largest

When she tells a fortune she begins by turning the book in her hands three or four times, and opens it at random. She then gazes with a burning intensity, while the veins swell in her temples and her eyes, become inflamed and tearful. Her mouth twitches, and very slowly she chants her wonderful message.

Having long made her study, since early childhood, I have never had an opportunity of looking into that book. I am under the impression that it is a Sabbath school edition of some American tract work or a condensed form of Barter's "Sainte Rest."

She professes to read between the lines, and violently opposes any one opening the book. Whatever it is it inspires some wonderful revelations about simple folk. Her husband died after a few years, and by some quirk in the settlement, she lost all the property. She declared her dead husband told her, through the powers she possessed, to dispose of fig.

"He came every night," she told me, "and the lost of the close the rest and the sunder the lost of the close the close in any way again; not to do anything and told her, through the powers she possessed, to dispose of fig.

So the grand old books were given away—some were burned. The beautiful clock that had chimed out its notes in the "faderland" and in the old mansion for more than a century was sold for a $5 greenback! And then the court came in for a turn, and Ann lost the weather-beaten house.

But she did not mourn a homeless widow long. She found and married a tramp Frenchman, Eugene Hotel, who threatens to return to an amable veuve in France every time he gets mad with her.

Palaces That Are Visited Every Now and Then by Departed Spirits.

Marquise de Fontenoy says in The New York Recorder: It is a curious fact that Windsor Castle should be one of the only great palaces in Europe which is not supposed to be haunted, especially when it is borne in mind that it has been the residence of the most cruel and bloodthirsty of English kings. Hampton Court is haunted, so is the Tower, the latter by an undoubted ghost, which has been on the walk for centuries.

She claims to call up the dead in spirit

Whitehall was haunted by the headreturn to an amable veuve in France every time he gets mad with her.

She claims to call up the dead in spirit form. Upon one o'ccasion she and the despicable man, her husband, were refused entertainment at a country house. She repaired to the little church near the house and held an orgy all night long, which was witnessed by the terrified immates of the house, they declaring that the graves yawned and the night was peopled with ghosts. They were only too glad to have her at breakfast smiling her baneful smile and appeased! Ann lives now about four miles from Fincastle and she visits the village every summer. If not a welcome visitor, she is a humored one, and is jusually paid for the glesses she makes and which few really like to listen to, so near the truth are they.

Mrs. Roland, connected with very respectable people, and now old and feeble, has been for years considered a witch. Ignorant persons so consider her. For years she lived in an ugly house on Main street alone, and yet she talked incessantly to long departed friends. She has been wealthy and her people are able to keep her out of the poorhouse; yet it is said she who once robed in silk and beauty brought to her feet lovers, husband, friends and admirers is now exerted in putting evil spells upon people, in cursing them which in the days of her youth and beauty brought to her feet lovers, husband, friends and admirers is now exerted in putting evil spells upon people, in cursing them with all manner of blasphemies, and every person who knows her fears and shuns her.

It is said she quarrels as fiercely with the ghosts of her mother and sister upon their frequent visits as she ever quarreled with them in the flesh.
