Oh, one might reach heroic heights

By one strong burst of power;

He might emblaze the whitest lights

Of heaven for an hour:

But harder is the daily drag,

To smile at trials which fret and fag

And not to murmur nor to lag.

The test to greatness is the way

One meets the eternal Everyday.

To lift the hemlock up,
Pledge death with philosophic ease
And drain the untrembling cup;
But to be barefoot and be great,

Trod daily by the steadfast Greek?

Mourning Clothes for a Widow.

A widow's mourning is entirely different from that worn by any one else, says Anne Rittenhouse, in The October Delineator. She does not appear on the street for two or three weeks after the funeral, and then her mourning must be entirely correct in mourning must be entirely correct in every detail. Her suit may be of henrietta cloth if the weather is moderate; if it is cold, she wears dull-finished broadcloth or worsted. It should be trimmed simply with English crape. Any fanciful elaborations in the use of crape with it is in bad taste.

A six-inch fold of crape above the hem of the skirt is correct, and the coat may have a wide shawl collar and gauntlet cuffs of it; also an edging or vest down the front. Under the coat she wears a blouse of the material

On all her blouses she wears flat on all her blouses she wears flat bands of white organdy, about an inch wide at the neck and three inches at the wrist. This does not have any stitches, but is pressed into place by the fingers. As it soils easily, it is usual to begin with a dozen sets. The bands for the sleeves are now mounted on white crinoline to keep them stiff. They are fastened at the back, as the collar band is, with small oblong dull jet or ebony bar-pins.

The bonnet, for the first six months, is deite small, in the shape commonly known as "Mary Stuart." It has a tiny crepe lisse ruche at the front edge, and the veil is pinned on it in folds with tiny dull jet pins.

Crape is the usual material for such a veil, worn over the face as well as at the back. There has been so much opposition to this, however, from loc-tors and all sensible people that many widows substitute for the unhealthy Erglish crape a veil of black grenadine; this is soft and porous.

After three months a widow may wear the veil off the face, carelessly thrown back over the bonnet, and a neat veil bordered by crape is used over the face, hanging loose to the in 1899, the little girl never had been in

At the Alexandra. THE CIRCUS GIRL.

Royal Alexandra. This remarkably popular comic opera is given by special arrangement with Mr. George Edwardes of the Galety Theatre, London, and is difficult to stage on account of the rapidity of its action and the call it makes on the capacity of the leading members of the cast. For, 'lke most English productions, it depends on the general excellence of the company, and for that reason demands an artistic completeness not always found in other than special cases. It is a tribute to the calibre of the Imperial Opera Company that "The Circus Girl" received so commendable a first performance yesterday, and certainly the large audience could not have been more responsive and appreciative, Eyldently the Saturday matinee premiere and the management has matinee, and the management has promised its patrons a novelty in Miss Cora Livingston, who holds the world's champion belt for the best of all lady wrestlers. Miss Livingston has just completed a month's stay in New York and while there met over 60 ady wrestlers and no one was fortunate to lower her colors.
