Interviewed, Sir Charles Lucas said the motive of their visit was simply to bring the colonial office into a closer and more personal touch with the dominions beyond the seas, and to bring about a more intimate knowledge, by personal intercourse, which will strengthen the good relations between the colonial office and the Australian and New Zealand governments. "We want," said Sir Charles, "to dispel the idea which seems to have prevailed to some extent in the past that we are It Is Feared Lives Have Been wrapt up in a hide-bound conservatism in Downing street. We want to make ourselves conversant with the conditions in the Commonwealth and the Dominion, and to come to a better ur derstanding on all matters pertaining to our mutual welfare."

Speaking of his impressions of the Dominion, so far as he had been able to judge, Sir Charles said that he had seen.
