An indignation meeting of those opposed to fish monopolies was held in the City. Hall this evening. The audience was margely made up of fishermen and masters of vessels. Resolutions were presented and unanimously adopted setting forth that an important crisis has arisen in the principal industry of Gloucester; that for mutual protection it is absolutely necessary that some action be taken, to retain carried by the Democracy for the first time in eight years. His election was due largely to the exertions of personal friends, as well as to the disaffected Republicans, who had risen to crush the machine because it had sought to crush the man who was, by his intelligence as well as by his mully independence, the leader of the Eighth Congressional District—his personal friend, General Anson G. McCook. [Cheers.] The time had gone by for talking; work was now in order. In the last Presidential election the Republicans had sprung on the Democrats the tariff issue and had won, but the ghost of Macbeth is coming back to plague the inventors. Great issues new demand prompt and wise action at Democratic hands. Twenty-two States are linked arm in arm in the Democratic procession, and if the party be true to the country and to itself, unlimited power was at its disposal. In conclusion Mr. Adams said:

"I am in favor of a Civil Service reform bill, but I also favor supplementing it with a bill that will make a penal offense the coercion of any officeholder to contribute even $1 of his salary toward a corruption fund."

Congressman Cox was the next speaker. He said:

"As I came forward the band played the tune called 'The Little Widow Dunn.' I do not know the signification of the playing, but I think the Republican party is both widowed and done. [Cheers and laughter.] I congratulate yon on the recent revolution in our politics. The Adams family has always been revolutionary and I am not surprised to find an Adams leading the revolution in this district, of which I was the last Democratic representative. The greatest of the elder Adamses was Sam Adams, who was described by Theodore Parker as not a Hebrew man nor a Christian man, but one of Plutarch's heroic men. I think that John J. Adams may be descended from Sam Adams. I don't like to exult too much; but I really believe that the Republican party has nearly departed, You know tho story of the old lady, who, feeling thirsty one night, got up in the dark and drauk from a bowl in which lay a ball of yarn. By and by she began to puck her terth, got hold of the end of the yarn, and began to pull. As yard after yard came up, she exclaimed: "Before the Lord, I think I am ravelling right out."
