she's a bit shy, but let her alone. She's but a young thing."

"Young, indeed," said Guy, more to himself than to the dame, "and so beautiful, and all alone in the world! Poor little thing!"

A light step caught his ear, and he looked up with a pleasant smile. Yes, she was beautiful, very beautiful; and as he looked a strange sort of feeling came over him. He seemed to remember having seen her before; or was it that he fancied that he detected a likeness to some one?

With a vague sensation of surprise be found a name for that some one. It was Constance Hartleigh.

It was Constance Hartleigh. It was Constance Hartleigh.

She turned to him her full face, with her cap of tea, and the resemblance was not to Constance, but to some one cisc whom he could not place. And yet she was like Constance too.

"Tshaw! What a fanciful beggar I will be said to himself."

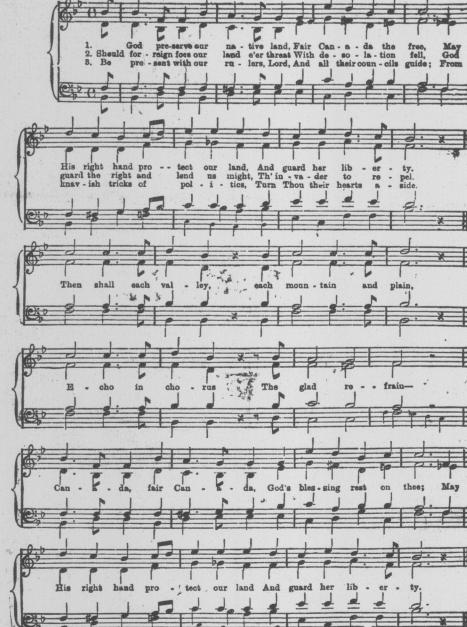

am," he said to himself.
"You have just been practising?"
said the dame to her lodger.

"Yes, dame.".
"And I owe you an apology," said Guy. "You were not playing when I entered the church, and I am afraid I was asleep when you commenced." "Was it you whom I saw going up by the side of the church? I did not know I had had a listener until I know I had had a listener until I saw you going down the path."
"Yes," answered Guy, "and I owe you thanks as well as an apology, for I never heard sweeter music."
She blushed divinely, but said nothing, as if willing to drop the subject; and Guy, following the dame's advice, left her alone. Meanwhile he drank his tea, and attacked the toast. But though he did not talk, he could not help looking; and the sweet face, with the soft brown eyes, seemed to throw a kind of soothing spell over him.
"And now I'm going to clear the things away," said Dame Chester, after a few moments of chat. "You'll

"Let me help you," was the cheery answer; but the old lady would have

The young girl walked to the window and looked out for a moment, then sat down and drew a little bastet of needleweek toward her and ket of needlework toward her and got out her needle and thread as quietly and naturally as if she were Forgive me," said Guy, looking at her curiously. The Antiquity of Man.

Prof. Matthew Flinders Petrie, in a lecture in London, summed up in a few sentences of intense interest the latest evidence of the antiquity of the human race.

Antiquarians now have to deal with Egypt alone. There is an unbroken chain of historic record from 5000 B.C., besides actual objects which carry history back 2,000 years further, thus giving 9,000 years of the three are from the beginning.

There were traces which showed that civilization must have come from another country, but where none has the slightest idea. The carllest graves have figures of a race of bushnen of a type discovered sinilar to those found in France and Malta, proving that the race extended from Africa into Europe. Then there are figures of women who were captured from still carller races, which probably were of the palaecilithic age. Beyond this there was a totally different from to-day, when a rainfall fertilized what is now a desert, and when animals, of which all trace has been lost, inhabited the country.

Other lands might show the ago of man to be more remote by physical evidences but nowhere could we feel more plainly the certainty of the antiquity of man than where 9,000.
