erland titles and patents of nobility have been conferred for centuries as the award of some valient or valuable deed. It is true that in English history the deeds deemed worthy of such recognition were varied in character; one belted earl won his earldom by leading his retainers against the King's enemies, another supplied His Majesty with a particularly gratifying brand of "mead," the product of his own estates, and yet today the descendants of each of these have given to tackle immediate life-and-death abundant return for the titles operations by flickering candle light herited from their forefathers.

certain days could not be carried into effect without causing some hardship, but Dr. Garfield, fuel administrator of the United States, has endeavored to reduce this to the minimum by requesting that manufacturing plants interfered with should, so far as possible, pay their employes for time lost. It is not likely this will be done in all cases, but even if it is not he books of the organization, and an all cases, but even if it is not he workman who loses his work is merely sharing a part of the national burden due to his country's participation in war. If he loses his work and his pay his employer loses his profit, and the employer's loss is relatively heavier for he is still compelled to bear a largel portion of his overhead for the interest and their position. Canada is democratic in its ideas and their position. Canada is democratic in its ideas and ideals but experience has shown that in the great majority of cases the men who have been knighted for eminent service are the greatest democrats of all.

If the prospect of a title serves as in incentive to a public man to work having the provided for the interests of his country, then the investment is a good one. At any rate the presence of gentlemen of title has not yet proven a burden to this country and until it does there is no necessity for an agitation to discontinue their creation.
