FAMOUS GEMS OF PROSE

REFORMERS By Robert G. Ingersol

OST reformers have infinite confidence in creeds, resolutions and laws. They think of the common people as raw mater ial out of which they propose to construct institutions and governments, like mechanical contrivances, where each person wil stand for a cog, rope, wheel, pulley or bolt, and the reformers will be the managers and directors. They forget that these cogs and wheels have opinions of their own; that they fall out with other and refuse to turn with other wheels; that the pulleys and ropes have ideas peculiar to themselves, and delight in mutiny and revolution. These reformers have theories that can only be realized whe other people have none. changing their surroundings. It is alleged that at least 95 per cent. of the criminals transported from England to Australia and other penal colonies, became good and useful citizens in a new world. Free from former associates and associations, from the necessities of hard, cruel and competitive civilization, they became, for the mospart, honest people. This immense fact throws more light upon so ial questions than all the theories of the world. All people able to support themselves. They lack intelligence, industry, followed in it will demand constant and seasonable goods that there should be no teracting dangerous tendencies and some comes such a burden that he has to give in a bad way should keep in mind its third sharp supervision.
