It is to be hoped that news of other lands is not sought solely from curiosity, but flom a desire to profit by it. It is not to satisfy human hunger for news alone that the telegraph and the press labor, but to promote the welfare of the people for whom news is gathered and distributed. The prosperity and the misfortunes of one country serve as guides and warnings for others. Look at the Atlantic cities of the Union now, for instance. Their great manufacturing interests are in a state of semi-staglor instance. sions of suffering among the surplus workmen during the coming winter. Every paper is filled with suggestions for preventing suffering. Some advocate one kind of relief, some another, but all agree that relief must be afforded. The prospect, at present, is that much suffering will be experienced. Now, what is the lesson to be learned? It is prudence and preparation. "In peace prepare for war"—in plenty prepare for scarcity. The people who are threatened with a winter of pauperism in New York, Boston and other cities might have saved enough from their surplus earnings during the past year to have kept them in plenty through
