

seen service in Phillipsburg, Fort Erie and St. Catharines, twelve are still living, but among the list are names that have long been forgotten., this old sheet of paper being all that remains to recall their names to those who knew the bearers in the long ago.

Three members of No. 1 Company served over 25 years continuously and were awarded the long service medal by a grateful government. John Clockenburg, who had been in the Prussian army and served in the Franco-Prussian war before coming to Niagara, James Hartley and Joseph Masters. James Hartley first came to Niagara with the Scarboro Rifles in 1864-65, and liked the place so well that he came back later and remained permanently. Joining No. 1 Company as bugler, he rose to the rank of bugle major, and occupied that position till the company was disbanded. I can remember how all the children admired Mr. Hartley's martial appearance as he marched at the head of the procession whenever No. 1 appeared in public. The last time I remember seeing him march thus was when the funeral of the late Frank Bishop was held, this being only a short time before the company went out of existence. In speaking of the Fenian excitement of 1866, Mr. Hartley told me he engaged on the steamer City of Toronto after the Fenian raid was over in 1866, and was on the boat when the Fenian prisoners, who had been confined in the Toronto jail, were released and sent across the lake to Lewiston, en route to Buffalo, each man having his passage paid and being given $5.00 besides by the Canadian government.

Joseph Masters came honestly by his love of soldiering, as his father was a sergeant in the 60th Regiment and received his discharge while the regiment was in this vicinity. He joined No. 1 Company in 1861 and served in it continuously till 1889, when he gave up active military life, though he always took a keen interest in such matters till his death. He received a Fenian raid medal when his fellow veterans did and also received a land grant with the rest.

A complete list of the members of No. 1 Company cannot be obtained just now, but we hope to get it later. Richard Wynn was the last veteran of 1866 to answer the last call, and he was, by his own request, carried to the grave by some
