THE OLD TURNPIKE.

We hear no more the clinking hoof, And the stage-coach rattling by; For the steam-king rules the travelled world, And the old Pike's left to die. The grass creeps o'er the flinty path,

And the stealthy daisies steal, Where once the stage-horse, day by day, Lifted his iron heel.

No more the weary stager dreads The toil of the coming morn ; No more the bustling landford runs At the sound of the echoing horn; For the dust lies still upon the road, And bright-eyed children play, Where ence the clattering-hoof and wheel Rattled along the way.

No more we hear the crackling whip, Or the strong wheels rumbling round ;-Ah ha! the water drives us on, And an iron horse is found ! The coach stands rusting in the yard, And the horse hath sought the plough ; We've spanned the world with an iron rail, And the steam-king rules us now !

The old Turnpike is a pike no more, Wide open stands the gate; We have made us a road for our horse to stride, Which we ride at a flying rate. We have filled the valleys and levell'd the hills, And tunnell'd the mountain's side ; And round the rough crag's dizzy verge, How fearlossly we ride!

On-on-with a haughty front ! A puff, a shriek, and a bound; While the tardy echoes wake too late, To babble back the sound; And the old Pike road is left alone, And the stager's sought the plough; We have circled the earth with an iron rail, And the steam-king rules us now !

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

A certain German Clergyman one day, while riding a fine horse on a journey through Waterloo, to perform his pastoral duties, was accosted by a newly made Magistrate, who addressed him in the following words :-

"Well, Mr. B., you are not following the example of our Saviour."

"How so ?" interrogated the parson. "Why," replied the worthy J. P., "Our Saviour rode on an ass, and I see Riddell, to be discharged within three cayou are mounted on a beautiful steed." tell you the reason of that. In the time the estate, real or personal, of the said of our Saviour asses were plenty, but nowa-days they become scarcer every day.—
