Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

A WORD TO THE KIND-HEARTED.

Are you too thin, and sensitive about it? Or are you comfortably padded (or maybe more than comfortably padded) and inclined to be facetious at the expense of your thin friends? This may sound like a take-a-course ad, but it isn't. It is merely by way of introduction to the suggestion of a letter friend.

more and the fat ones, secure in their numbers and not realizing their own sins because they are so common, dare to make fun of him. I do not know how true this is although I believe insurance figures show that overweight is more common than underweight, but I did hear an interesting illustration of this mote and beam attitude the other day.

A thin person was bemoaning the fact that she had only gained a few pounds when she hoped to gain more. Another woman standing by said with the exquisite tact of the comfortably padded, "Why you need about fifty pounds more, don't you?"

She Was Just As Bad the Other Way. As a matter of fact the thin woman was about twenty pounds under correct weight, and the other woman was that much over.

If one weighs just what one should weigh I suppose one has a right to cast the first stone, but even then one might be deterred from exercising that right by such considerations as courtesy, breeding and tenderness for the feeling of others.

However it might be interesting to have the right so perhaps you will be interested in the following weight. It is supplied by a well known physician.

"Multiply number of inches over five feet in height (without shoes) by five and a half, and add one hundred and ten. If under five feet multiply number of inches under five and a half, and subtract from one hundred and ten. Add five pounds for clothing. The result is your ideal weight."

A Fortune at Stake.

The Touring Club of France is searching for a woman to whom to hand a fortune.

In 1914 a M. Brunier left half his fortune to the club and the other half to a woman whom they were to find. They are conducting an active search for her to-day, but the conditions under which she may benefit are unusual.

She must be the wife of a guide in the French Alps; she must live in a Commune not less than 3,000 feet above sea-level; she must have not fewer than seven children; and the children must have been born at not less than an altitude of 3,000 feet.

A Remarkable Story.

Sir Harry Lauder, who has turned fifty, probably knows more funny stories than any other man in the kingdom, and also tells them better. Unfortunately, when I last bumped into him a few weeks ago it was in a crowd, and we had no more time than to shake hands; but I have one new Lauder story up my sleeve, and here it is.

A Scotsman once approached him and declared that he would tell him the most "remarkable" anecdote in the world. Sir Harry asked him to unbutton himself, whereupon the Scotsman related a story which was so weak that tea composed of milk and water could not have been weaker.

"It is no 'a remarkable story, now?" asked the narrator.

"What's remarkable in it?" demanded Sir Harry.

"What's remarkable in it?" echoed the other. "Have ye ever told it yet?"

Sir Harry shook his head. "Well, mon," returned his companion, "that's just what makes it remarkable!"

WILLY MARON

DEMPSEY. Jack Dempsey will battle 'em all, the short and the tall; he'll meet any chap who's intent on a scrap, and plaster him over the wall. Oh, long have we yearned for a champ who'd fight at the wink of a lamp; and it's been a long day, I am prompted to say, since we had a good boy of that stamp! But Dempsey, he rather would fight, than go to a lecture at night; he has no excuse when he's asked to produce "invincible left" or the right. I hope in some bright coming year the prize ring will quite disappear; outworn and outlawed it will rest 'neath the sod, and no one will hand it a tear. But while it's a human device I think that the pugs should cut ice, and put up a mill with a hearty good will when anyone offers the prize. So Dempsey's a solace to me; I watch all his motions with glee; a fighter who'll fight is a joy to the sight, whatever his conditions may be!

TYPHOID OUTBREAK. - Nurse Morry left yesterday morning's train for Musgrave Harbor where a serious outbreak of typhoid fever has occurred, due, it is alleged, to impure water.

Does It Pay to Back Horses?

TIPS THAT MERELY TIP THE TIPSTER.

"If those who will back horses," writes a leading authority on the Turf, "could first get a glimpse of the persons and surroundings of some of the prophets to whom they entrusted their shillings, they would at once be convinced they would serve their purpose as well by putting the names of the horses in a hat and backing the one they might first happen to draw from it."

In the old days, before newspapers began to anticipate winners for the benefit of their readers, the tipster was a very specious sort of rascal who played his part under a wide range of disguises.

One man who for ten years reaped a rich harvest as a tipster was "stone blind," and had never seen a race-horse in his life. Another posed as a clergyman who had "obtained the names of the first three horses for the Derby from a tout to whom he had ministered on his death-bed." His object in advertising was to provide a small fund for the relief of the tout's destitute family.

Other tipsters masqueraded as a lady's maid who had accidentally learnt the name of the winning horse; as veterinary surgeons connected with racing stables; as valet to a racing gentleman, and so on, through the whole gamut of fraudulent subterfuges. All, one may be quite sure, made an excellent thing out of their knavery.

Some tipsters would take the precaution to nominate all the horses in a race; being very careful, however, to send the name of one horse only to all the applicants from the same town, so as to obviate the risk of detection by comparison.

The natural result of this comprehensive tipping was that one of the horses must prove the actual winner, and his fame would be great in the particular town thus favoured by chance.

How easy and profitable the game can be is proved by a case quoted by an authority, who writes: "A man who had been writing as Turf leader for a paper was out of harness. In order to keep the wolf from the door he advertised as a tipster; and I heard him say that in three days fourteen hundred letters, each of them containing a postal order for a sovereign, had been delivered at his house." A tipster who can thus earn £1,400 in three days as a novice at the game need not envy anyone.

Of course, there are tipsters and tipsters, and I need not say that the better class tipster is of an entirely different class from those I have described. The "sporting prophets" attached to our leading newspapers are almost invariably men of sound judgment based on accurate and painstaking knowledge of horses and their performances. Such men can form as reliable an estimate of the possibilities of a race as is humanly possible; but they have their limitations.

False Prophecies. Some time ago a magazine published the following instructive list of prophecies of six of the leading sporting papers, with the results. Without mentioning names, the list is as follows:—

A nominated 197 winners, 170 were wrong; B nominated 155 winners, 139 were wrong; C gave 165 winners, of which 140 were wrong; of 110 winners nominated by D, 93 were wrong; and the figures for the other two papers were respectively, 104, wrong out of 122, and 131 out of 149. Thus out of 588 nominations no fewer than 777 proved misleading.

tipsters, add I need not say that the better class tipster is of an entirely different class from those I have described. The following analysis of the prophecies of the sporting sub-editor of a London daily newspaper is equally convincing. During one month the prophet named 179 horses for 148 races as probable winners. His prophecies were wrong in respect of 155 horses, and right in respect of 24. In 60 of these races he named 68 horses, none of which won. In 51 races he named 73 horses, and scored nine winners.
