

Quaker Minister Is Grateful to Tanlac

Rev. Parker Moon.

Nearly everybody in Southwest Missouri either knows or has heard of the Rev. Parker Moon, who for a full half century has devoted his life and talents to Sunday school and organization work for the Society of Friends or Quakers.

"Uncle Parker," as he is more familiarly known, came from fine old rugged Quaker stock, and there is not a better known or more highly respected citizen in that part of the state. In referring to his remarkable restoration to health by Tanlac, he said:

"About five years ago I suffered a general breakdown. My principal trouble was nervous indigestion. My appetite was very poor and my food seldom agreed with me, and I had to live on a very restricted diet. I suffered a great deal from headaches and dizzy spells. I had severe pains across the small of my back and was badly constipated most of the time. In fact, I was so weak and rundown I was not able to attend to my duties.

"This condition made me very nervous and I could not sleep at night. Frequently I would lie awake most of the night and in that condition more or less for five years. My physician said he could not do anything for me and suggested a change of climate. I then moved to Texas and went back and forth three times but did not get the relief I had hoped for. Finally, I got so bad off I was not able to get around with any degree of comfort. I was also told I had heart trouble.

"I had read about Tanlac and, as it had been very highly recommended to me, I decided to try it. I got a bottle and had taken only a few doses until I could notice a marked improvement in my condition. I noticed especially that I was not troubled any more with sour stomach after eating, which was a great relief. I kept on taking Tanlac until I fully regained my health. My appetite is splendid; I enjoy my meals and I do not find it necessary now to take any laxative medicines of any kind. I can sleep much better and am not nearly so nervous.

"I take great pleasure in recommending Tanlac to anyone who needs a good system builder, or who suffers with stomach trouble. I have recommended Tanlac to a great many of my friends and am pleased to reach others by giving this statement for publication."

Eatest Fashion Notes From Samoa.

R. M. Dalton, the British Trade Commissioner in New Zealand, sends the following from Western Samoa:

"The natives still live in native fashion, the adoption of European customs in the matter of houses and clothes being almost entirely absent. Under ordinary circumstances the clothing of the men, and very often of the women, consists only of a lava lava (a loin cloth 44 by 72 inches) tied around the waist and falling to the knees.

"In the evenings and when in town the men often wear a singlet in addition to the lava lava, and on special occasions they frequently wear, in addition, a white coat similar to the coats worn by white men in the tropics. The men never wear either shoes or socks; the women, too, rarely wear any covering for the feet.

"The kind of lava lava worn by the men depends on the occasion; for ordinary purposes they usually wear a jean, while for special occasions they may wear a white drill or a special cashmere. The same is true of the women to some extent.

"During the day and in their ordinary occupations the women frequently wear nothing but the lava lava, but it is not unusual for them to wear a short cape of some dark material and probably of cashmere over their shoulders and covering the upper part of their bodies. In the evenings and in the towns, however, they usually wear a bodice and a kind of overall above the lava lava. The native women are excellent dressmakers, and some of their frocks are both expensive and attractive.

Generally Well-to-Do.

"The main points to remember regarding the natives of Samoa are that they are generally well-to-do; they always have at hand a ready means for increasing their income if such an increase is desired for any reason.

"The cashmere trade is of particular interest, in that it was in this trade that Germany did what was probably her biggest business in the section. The article for which a great demand existed was a cotton cashmere with a poplin effect on the back, the most valuable colors were black, blue-black, ad wine color, but it was also supplied in other self-colors and in stripes.

"In addition to the shades already mentioned, ecru, maroon, pink, brown and purple were popular. The material should be at least forty-two inches wide and the selvedge should be the same color as the piece, i.e., not gray. The most important essential, however, is that colors should be fast; the Samoans wash their clothes a great deal, and as a general rule it was found that while other dyes often gave out, the German dyes, particularly in these cashmères, were almost always fast."

Fads and Fashions.

The soft brim of a velvet hat becomes a bow in the front. French models have skirt and bodice of different materials. Black velvet shoes have ankle straps clasped with diamonds. Coat linings are of printed crepe de chine in Oriental colorings. A charming girle is a garland of velvet roses with bead centers.

Ghosts That Haunt King George.

Mysterious Spectres in Royal Residences.

There is abundant evidence to show that weird ghostly manifestations have taken place in Britain's Royal residences.

One afternoon, an officer of the Grenadier Guards, on duty at Windsor Castle, was reading in the library when, on looking up, he saw the figure of a woman, dressed in black, pass into the inner library. At the time he took little notice of the incident, concluding that the figure was that of a visitor. On leaving, he reminded the attendant that the woman was still within.

"But no woman entered the library," said the mystified attendant.

"I saw one there, anyhow!" replied the officer.

"The figure you saw was the ghost of Queen Elizabeth," was the librarian's calm announcement when the incident was related to him. "Duly authenticated records show that for years it has haunted those two rooms, although you happen to be the only person of the present generation who has seen it."

The appearance of an apparition of the same queen is recorded in connection with what was once Richmond Palace. It was first seen when the queen was still alive, although she was seriously ill at the time. One of her ladies-in-waiting, Lady Guildford, left her Royal mistress's bedchamber for a few moments, when to her astonishment she thought she saw the queen preceding her along a corridor. Hurrying back to the bedchamber, Lady Guildford found that Queen Elizabeth was still in bed and, in fact, fast asleep. The ghost was seen many times after the queen's death.

Hampton Court Palace has a coterie of ghosts distinctly its own. Among them are the unfortunate Catherine Howard, Jane Seymour, Catherine of Aragon, and Sibell Pann. Strange stories of these ghostly visitants have been told by residents. Many of these witnesses declare they have seen the ghost of Catherine Howard. It haunts a certain corridor, and is said to be "dressed in white, and shrieking horribly." Catherine Howard was one of the wives of Henry VIII, but his affection for her was tinged with suspicion. He instituted inquiries, imprisoning her meanwhile in her room, and, managed to reach the king's presence, where she sank on her knees and pleaded for mercy. It is part of this distressing scene which witnesses say has been enacted in Hampton Court Palace many times since.

The Wraith at the Spinning-Wheel. The ghost of Jane Seymour is still reported to ascend at frequent intervals the staircase leading to what is known as the "Silver-Stick Gallery." The figure is dressed in white and carries a candle.

But the most interesting of the Hampton Court ghosts is that of Mistress Sibell Penn, who was nurse to the boy-king, Edward VI. One day, in the early part of the last century, queer sounds, reminiscent of those made by a spinning-wheel at work, were heard in one of the rooms of the Palace. The fact was brought to the notice of the authorities, and investigations were begun, as a result of which a new apartment was discovered. This apartment contained a spinning-wheel, and there were signs that it had been in recent use.

For fifty years nothing more was heard of the sounds. Then they began again. In addition, the figure of a woman in black was seen to emerge from the newly-discovered room every time a child died in the Palace. Among the many who saw it was Princess Frederica of Hanover, who was watching by the bedside of her dying daughter.—Tit-Bits.

A Biblical Find.

(From the Boston Herald.)

Immediately upon the cessation of hostilities in the near east, Dr. James H. Breasted of the University of Chicago, at the head of an archaeological expedition, proceeded from Baghdad to Aleppo, through the newly constituted Arab states, and now he returns to America with the announcement that he has unearthed new tablets that "will make the Oriental Museum in the University of Chicago the finest of the kind in the United States." For a long time the University of Pennsylvania has held that place, its claims founded upon its discoveries in Babylonia and its possession of the Nippur tablets with their accounts of the creation of man and the flood. Dr. Breasted is well known among scholars, and he has the bustling qualities of a business man as well. He was the first American to traverse the Arab states, and he encountered real risks in the journey. But he has his reward, for chief among the finds he announces is a six-sided prism containing an Assyrian account of the destruction of the city of Nineveh, a record which may solve one of the puzzles of Testament history. The prophecy of Isaiah contains the story how, in the days of King Hezekiah, the Assyrian King, having laid waste all the nations and all their countries, "marched against Jerusalem, and how Isaiah announced that God would defend the city. The climax comes in xxviii, 36, of the prophecy:

"Then the angel of the Lord went forth and smote in the camp of the Assyrians a hundred and four-score and five thousand; and when they arose early in the morning, behold, they were all dead corpses."

Byron in one of his Hebrew melodies put the tale into stirring verse:

The Assyrian came down like the wolf on the fold, And his cohorts were gleaming in purple and gold, And the sheen of their spears was like stars on the sward, When the blue wave rolls nightly on deep Galilee. Like the leaves of the forest when summer is green, That host with their banners at sunset were seen; Like the leaves of the forest when autumn has blown That host on the morrow lay withered and strown.

Just what happened to the Assyrian host has not been known.

"No Peace for the Wicked."

The heroine of this story is a certain mischievous Madge, small daughter of a house which shelters also the hero, a mischievous puppy answering to the name of Bingo.

Madge ran into the garden on a secret mission. The devoted Bingo followed and imperilled the whole enterprise.

"Bingo," said Madge, "for goodness sake don't follow me everywhere. Can't you understand I want to be alone sometimes?"

Bingo seemed to understand that he was being scolded, and rolled on his back, penitential legs waving in the air. Madge was touched.

"You know, Bingo," she was heard to say, confidentially. "I am always being watched, and it is so trying—there's the nurse and the governess and if I escape them, there's always my Guardian Angel."

A Negro City.

Fifteen years ago a certain landlord owning tenement houses in 135th Street, New York, had what is not unusual—a misunderstanding with certain of his tenants. It appears he sought to increase the rent, at which actual and prospective tenants vigorously demurred. At a warm point in the controversy the landlord lost his temper and swore that unless the flats were filled at a certain date at the new rate he had laid down he would forthwith open his buildings to Negroes. His threat failed to move the enraged tenants, so, true to his word, he advertised the flats for Negroes. That was the beginning of the great Negro city of Harlem, with to-day numbers, about 150,000 colored folk.
