Our Total Bedys

April 27.- I to the Board of Trade where I did have discourse with divers members of the meeting which the people will hold tomorrow, and all think it a good thing that Sir Robert Bond will come out. I did notice s. strange thing, being that the face of the clock did become detached and was hung on the board below its frame. At night I dine with the Motor Association at their annual meeting. So to play at ping pong in the C. L. B. armoury. I did play with Mr. H. A. Winter and he beat me in two games out of three, and I very hot, like in summer almost. Anon to the dance which the T. N. T. hold, being a secret society of ladies. Nor could I discover the meaning of the name and it is the first time I have found a woman to keep a secret.

Secrets No Longer.

Several questions which many of us asked in vain during the war concerning the mystery of certain operations are answered in the second volume of Sir Julian Corbett's "Naval Operations" part of the official history of the war.

(1) Why did all the German ships except the Blucher escape in the battle of the Dogger Bank?-Because Admiral Beatty's signals, "Keep closer to the enemy," were incorrectly read, and because owing to another mistake the Tiger did not fire at the Derfflinger, which was able to concentrate her guns on the British flagship (the Lion) and disable her.

(2) Why weren't the Germans cleared out of Ostend in 1914?-A plan prepared by Sir John French was approved by General Joffre. It was necessary to amalgamate British and Belgian armies, Sir Julian says:-

When it was submitted to the King of the Belgians he was unable to agree. If the field-marshal decided to make the attempt on Ostend he was ready to co-operate to his full strength, but he could not consent to the proposed unity of command.

(3) Could the Navy alone have forced the Dardanelles?-Four allied ships were sunk or damaged by a line of twenty Turkish mines. If the Navy dah attempted to get through, Sir Julian says:-

ships could reach Sari Sighlar Bay, they would have to run the gauntlet of five lines of mines, besides the new Eren Keui line. . . . It is true that the Nagara group of forts was obsolete and practically negligible, but the chances against getting so far through the unswept minefields, which in all contained nearly three hundred and fifty mines, are calculated to have been fifteen to one-that is, out of sixteen ships only one could have hoped to reach the Sea of Mar-

It was Lord Kitchener who persuaded Lord Fisher not to resign after the Admiral had disapproved of the Dardanelles plan.
