"But Guy," said Kate Arden, onthusiastically, "she is the sweetest girl you over saw-exactly like a human daisy." Now, Miss Kate Arden herselt was one of the prettiest and most coaxing of feminine elves-a dark-haired, hazel-eyed girl of seventeen, with a carnation glow on her sheeks, and lips so red and ripe that they suggested the idea of kissing almost as a

But Guy, having the misfortune to be her brother, was, after the fashion of brothers in general, blind, deaf and dumb to all these bewitching attractions, and merely shrugged his shoulders as she paused and looked entreatingly up into his face.

"I'm much obliged to you for your so-licitude in my behalf," he answered, indifferently ; "but I prefer to work out my own destiny. Even if I cared to meet your school-girl divinity-which I don't---"
