BEGONIAS.

These, whether fibrous or tuberous rooted, require an evenly warm, moist place. They vary somewhat in their power to endure a chilly or dry atmosphere, but all thrive better where their requirements can be fully met. Give them plenty of light, but avoid direct sunlight during noonday in summer. Secure good drainage by a layer of charcoal at the base of the pot, and see that the plants are not over-potted. Give small plants small pots, and shift into larger ones as they grow. Always rest the Rex and Tuberous Begonias for a few weeks in winter, during which period keep the soil barely moist, and the pots in a rather cool place, say 50°. A partial rest should also be given the other sorts when their condition indicates that rest is needed.—Park's Magazine.
