

EXTRACT OF LETTER FROM REV. DR. CAMPBELL.

(It has been already stated that Rev. J. L. Campbell, D.D., pastor of the Lexington Avenue Baptist Church, New York, was unremitting in his kind attention and services during the last days of Mr. Harris in that city. The following extract from a letter written by him to Rev. Dr. Stewart is of touching interest in its reference, among other things, to the last sermon Mr. Harris heard.)

I do not know when my heart was so deeply stirred as it was at the time of your son-in-law's death. His own triumphant faith and the sweet beauty of your dear daughter's Christian fortitude, will never be effaced from my memory. My own life has been richly benefited from coming in contact with them. The last time I had any lengthened conversation with Mr. Harris was the Sunday morning that I preached in Calvary Church in an exchange. I happened to speak on "Paul's Bonds," as working for him the largest possible blessing. The apostle was chained to a success that he never dreamed of himself, apparently at first. So with our bonds, such as sickness, and so forth. The heart of Mr. Harris was greatly moved. We sat down together in the church after the congregation scattered, and he told me with sweetest simplicity and pathos how the chain that held him back from doing that which he so ardently longed to do, had linked him to the most wonderful experiences of God's love. We should not mourn; he has entered the unseen glory, and we will soon follow.
