SPORT NEWS OF A DAY: HOME AND ABROAD

BOWLING.

On Victoria Alleys.

On the Victoria alleys last night team No. 5 took three points from team No. 4 in the five-men league. The grand totals, however, differed only fifteen pins. Riley, of the defeated team, won the prize for the day of the highest string—115.

The details of the match follow:

No. 5: Total, Avg. Rows: Labbe, Lewis, Featherstone, Teed, Hill.

City League.

Another record for the city league was established last night at Black's alleys when Sullivan made the total of 147, surpassing the total of a few days ago of 139. The game was between the Sweeps and the Giants and the scores were as follows:

Giants: Total, Avg. Rows: Smith, Masters, Cobham, Belyea, Stacey.

The Sweeps took by four points to nil. Tomorrow evening the Elks and Hamblers meet.

FOOTBALL.

Will Abandon International Contests.

London, Dec. 3.—Delegates of the English, Scottish, Welsh and Irish professional football associations, at a meeting in London today, decided to recommend to their respective associations that international football matches this season be abandoned.

BASEBALL.

McGraw's Long Chance.

New York, Dec. 3.—John McGraw's experiment of taking fifty-two players to Marlin next spring in the hope of picking at least two or three good players is probably the biggest gambling chance ever taken in the big league.

even two good men the money will not have been spent in vain.

Under a new league rule that is to be passed next month the clubs will have to cut down their teams to twenty men after the season gets under way. This means that McGraw will have to get rid of thirty-two.

These thirty-two men cost the club on an average of $2,000 each. Add to this traveling and other expenses, and the total will run up to $70,000—all paid out before there are any returns.

In selling off the surplus of players, however, a considerable sum will be realized, but it is figured the experiment of securing a few good players will cost at least $47,500.

To Drop Elberfeld.

New York, Dec. 3.—Kid Elberfeld, who did a turn at assistant manager, coach, emergency scout and substitute shortstop of the Superbas last season, is to be let out by the Brooklyn Club. According to a report he has not been offered a contract for 1915.

Manager Wilbert Robinson will be forced to worry along without an assistant next season, while one of the youngsters is expected to have Elberfeld's job as second aid short-stopper.

Elberfeld knew that his career as a Superba was drawing near at the end of last season, as he had been tipped off that he would not be retained, and has been on the lookout for another job. Despite the fact that he has averaged 40th milestone, the one-time crack infielder on the Yanks is still capable of playing a nifty game at the shortstop position.

All the Brooklyn players who are expected to help the team next season are signed with the exception of Catcher Lew McCarty and Outfielder Jack Dalton, but Elberfeld expects both men to get into line in the near future and does not suspect either of Federal League action.

TURF.

Races at Van Buren.

Van Buren, Me., Dec. 3.—Horsemen at Van Buren and St. Leonard's have organized a winter club with 100 members, and are to hold ice races on the Van Buren ice track on Dec. 3, 24, 26 and 31 and January 1 and 3. This track permits half mile heats.

Purses of from $50 to $200 will be held. Classes will be arranged later.

Broke Up Partnership.

W. E. D. Stokes' great trotter, Peter Volo, 2:08 1/4, which won approximately $84,000 in stakes and purses during the last season, was an accident of breeding. His history in this respect is one of the romances of the turf, which shows how accidents may sometimes turn out better than the seemingly well-thought-out plans of the scientific breeder in speed lines.

The owners of Peter Volo's granddam, Scott Hudson and W. P. Knight, had intended to breed a mare called Josephine to one of the popular sires of high-breeding and speed-producing qualities then standing in Kentucky. Their plans miscarried and Mr. Knight, without the knowledge of his partner, had the mare bred to Nervolo, which, in spite of his race record of 2:04 1/4, was an unimpressive piece without a colt to his credit at the time.

The result of the mating was Nervolo Belle, which was in turn bred to Peter Volo, the trotting sensation of the year. Mr. Hudson was so angry about the breeding of Josephine Knight to Nervolo that he sold his interest in the mare and her foal for a merely nominal price. Mr. Knight had faith in the success of the mating, and he made for the two mares, a faith that was justified in the wonderful colt now resting at his winter quarters in Poughkeeps.

AQUATIC.

Off to Australia.

Honolulu, Dec. 3.—Lalo P. Kahana, world's champion short-distance swimmer, and George Cunha, also one of the best known American swimmers, have left here for Australia to meet the champions of the Antipodes.

Veteran Oarsman Dead.

Worcester, Dec. 3.—Jeremiah J. O'Leary, aged seventy, who in his day was one of the best known oarsmen in the country, is dead at his home, 281

Grafton street, after a protracted illness following a shock which he suffered on July 9, 1913.

Mr. O'Leary was born in Ireland on Sept. 23, 1844, and learned the trade of boat building in his native land. He came to this country in 1867 and engaged in that work, doing that until 1874. He was the proprietor of all the noted oarsmen in the closing years of the last century for training for important races on the lake, including Hanlon, Hooper, Bubeck, Plasted and Teemer.

Mr. O'Leary himself was an oarsman of ability and won many a hard race on the lake and elsewhere. As a boat-builder he was considered an expert, and made shells for Harvard, Yale, Cornell, Brown and most of the individual scullers. He retired from the boat-building business and at one time was in the liquor business. More recently he was connected with the city public building department up to the time he suffered the shock. He is survived by six children.

THE COW AND HER CUD.

The cow's cud consists of a food partially masticated which has been through the mouth and returned for more thorough mastication, says the Rural New Yorker in reply to a correspondent, and the only change the food has undergone is that a part of the insoluble starch has been changed to a sugar called maltose. When the food first enters the mouth of the animal it is ground by the teeth, and the soluble material with the alkaline saliva. In this condition the food is more easily swallowed.

They Eat Well.

In the last New York six-day bike race it is figured that fully $3,000 was spent for food. Of course, the riders do not consume as much as their trainers and handlers were fed in the camps. But the 86 riders ate more than the 150 odd trainers and handlers. For instance, the late Cyclone Moran consumed 16 family porterhouse steaks in every 24 hours of the race and these steaks cost on an average $1.25 each. This is just one item of food these riders consumed. They had chickens, lamb chops, and other meats as well. There were twenty-four chefs in the Garden cooking for the riders and their trainers, and their average salary for the week was $30.

The first real effort to minimize the commissary expense in connection with a continuous race will be tried in the Chicago race, which is scheduled for late in January. Manager Floyd McGraw of the Cycle Racing Association has formulated a plan to provide just one kitchen for the riders, and the will be conducted by the management. There will be two shifts of cooks and waiters, and when the riders are coming off the track they can order their food in advance and get anything they want to be served in their cabins or in one dining-room which will be provided. They will be charged for just what they eat and in this way they will not have to pay for any waste, such as there is in the individual camps. It looks like a very good idea, but whether or not it will be successful will not be known until it has been tried.

This Case Unique.

Dick Stosh, ex-National amateur champion, who was going along well in the professional game until he got "in bad" on account of his bout in Lorain, O. the other night, says he has quit the ring. His manager also has cast him aside because of that Lorain affair, which was declared a fake. A boxer who "fakes" can expect no sympathy, but in Stosh's case there appear circumstances which should entitle him to leniency. He carried with him into the ring a heavy heart because his father had died a couple of days before he fought that night for only one reason that he felt that he must earn the money to help his mother.

News of the Ring.

Ted Nelson an Australian who boxed Buck Croson in the United States a few years ago, is in the trenches in France.

Bob Scanlon, one of England's best-known boxers, who is fighting for the colors of his country, has seen some hard service, judging from a letter he writes. Jim Flynn, Pueblo heavyweight, makes it a point when he is boxing to give the bandages his opponents have on a careful looking over. Flynn was stung badly once because he was careless in that respect, and it taught him a lesson he will never forget.

"I was boxing a bushier," he says, "and I didn't bother to inspect his taped hands. He cut me every time he hit me, and when a punch came straight at me I thought I had been bit with the butt end of a 2 by 4 scantling. I realized that he had something closely related to a horseshoe in either mitt and I asked him about it after the fight. Then he let the secret out. Under each layer of tape he had inserted the thinnest kind of tin foil. It looked harmless enough, but when he closed his fist the tin foil tightened across his knuckles until his fists were as hard as steel. Hurt when he hit? Gee, while I always look them over now."

Frank Erne, ex-lightweight champion gives two ex-Boston boxers great credit for teaching him something about gymnasium work while training for a bout that was beneficial to him. Erne was a clever boxer and knows all the wrinkles of the game. He says that most of the boxers make a grave mistake punching heavy bags, while training in a gym.

"I used to do it," he says. "Like Weir came into my camp years ago and caught me doing that stunt."

"Get a fast bag," said he. "That thing will make you slower than a snail. Get a light leather bag and hang it up high, so that you'll have to hit up and fast. It'll make your arms ache at first, but you'll find that the exercise will prevent them ever getting weary and heavy in the ring."

"Matty Baldwin is the only man I ever saw who got the idea and you never see Matty's arms getting lopy. No, sir, the heavy bag is a all wrong."
