High Altitudes Menace Swimmers. Numerous drownings occurring recently in lakes of high elevation have pointed out a serious menace to swimmers as well as the necessity for the utmost care on the part of fishermen or others from the lowlands who journey about such waters, says the January Popular Mechanics Magazine. It is a well known fact that persons physically sound, dwelling in locations near sea level, find themselves short of breath under the slightest exertion when in high altitudes. Travel when such a person plunges into a mountain lake he finds that the exertion of swimming quickly exhausts his energies. Normal respiration is impossible and the heart action becomes dangerously rapid. It is the shortage of oxygen due to the elevation that accounts for some of the recent tragedies of Big Bear and Little Bear lakes in the San Bernardino Mountains. These lakes, more than a mile above sea level, are frequented by fishermen and pleasure seekers from the lowlands.

Any Old Time.
"Slick" Howard, representative from Georgia, spins a yarn about two negroes down in his country, a crap game, and a watch.

The first gentleman of color won a handsome gold-plated watch, chain and charm in a crap game. He could not tell time, but he was proud of his winnings, so he draped the chain from his coat lapel, placed the watch in his upper, outside coat pocket and started gaily up the street.

Soon he met a second negro, who also could not tell time, but who was immediately attracted by the bright chain on his friend's coat lapel.

"Why, hello dere, Sam," he said. "Whash you got dat fine watch on?"

"Oh, I win it in a crap game," was the reply.

"Whash you got dat fine watch on?" "What time is it?"

With just a second's hesitation, the owner of the watch fished it out of his pocket, face upward, under his friend's nose.

"Dead it is," he said.

Nonplussed, the other negro gazed fixedly at the face of the watch for a moment, and then, grinning, said:

"So it is, ain't it
